Middle Stories:

The Middle Stories Sheila Heti, 2012-04-10 Wildly acclaimed in Canada this book marks the debut of a remarkable young writer first published by McSweeney's when she was twenty three and living at home with her dad and brother. The Middle Stories is a strikingly original collection of stories, fables and short brutalities that are alternately heartwarming, cruel and hilarious. This edition marking the 10th anniversary of The Middle Stories will be designed in the newly iconic

McSweeney's paperback style and will be published shortly before Heti's newest novel How Should A Person Be emigrates from Canada via Henry Holt Co      Middle Aged Love Stories Josephine Daskam Bacon, 1903      Stories from English history, during the Middle ages [from English stories] revised by D.M. Smith Maria Hack, 1872      The Middle Stories

Sheila Heti, 2001-04-01 Balancing wisdom and innocence, joy and foreboding, Sheila Heti's completely original stories lead you to surprising places. This edition featuring nine new stories. A frog doles out sage advice to a plumber infatuated with a princess; a boy falls hopelessly in love with a monkey and a man with a hat keeps apocalyptic thoughts at bay by resolving to follow a plan that he admits he won't stick to. Globe and Mail critic Russell Smith has described Heti's stories as cryptic fairy tales without morals at the end but really the morals are in the quality of the telling and in the details disclosed along the way. Look where you weren't going to look, think what you wouldn't have thought. Heti seems to say, and meaning itself gains more meaning, more dimensions. Heti's stories are not what you expect but why did you expect that anyway? This special new edition features nine new stories that were not available in the first Canadian edition      Stories, Community, and Place

Barbara Johnstone, 1990 From the Blurb: Though social scientists often talk about the mainstream of American society, they have very rarely studied it. Stories, Community and Place does look at this group, examining the socio-linguistic behavior of the white middle class population of a Midwest city. Barbara Johnstone focuses on the stories people tell about their lives and the stories they jointly create to define the place where they live. She looks at people's stories about incidents in their own lives, discussing what it is that these stories share in structure and in theme and what it is that gives each speaker a creative individual voice. She then examines how people use narrative to create, perpetuate and manipulate social roles and relations. How, for example, are gender roles reflected in the stories women and men tell and how do men's and women's stories create worlds of contest and community? How do people use reported speech to indicate what their relationships to police officers and other authority figures are like while simultaneously suggesting what these relationships should be like? The final section of the book connects narrative with place. The author shows, for example, how stories are anchored in the local sociolinguistic world partly by being anchored in the local physical world. Another kind of connection between narrative and place is exemplified in a community story created by the media about a natural disaster in the city. This is a story which belongs to the city rather than to any of its citizens and one in which the city and its citizens become one. Stories, Community and Place will be of interest to linguists, anthropologists, sociologists and folklorists as well as to narratologists of any persuasion.
