Citizen Kane (1941) - Directed and Written by Orson Welles, Studio RKO

Back to the Future (1985) - Directed by Robert Zemeckis, Written by Robert Zemeckis and Bob Gale, Spielberg

When Harry Met Sally (1989) - Directed by Rob Reiner, Written by Nora Ephron, Studio MGM

They're complete opposites: Sally is seemingly perfect and has her life together – she talks about her future and how she already knows what she's doing with it. However, Harry has a more practical view on things and is more haphazard/seemingly slapdash with his approach to things seen when he spits at the window without thinking. His appearance and persona is then complicated when he begins to talk about dark sides and shows that he probably puts more thought in things than he seems.

The Graduate (1967) - Directed by Mike Nichols, Studio MGM

The camera constantly follows him suggesting he's the main character throughout. Looking into distance – considering future, what to do next. Not looking straight into camera – doesn't know what's coming next. Conveyor belt is pushing him towards metaphorical future no matter what. People rush past – they know what they want and where they're going, he doesn't. Bland background – bleak future.

The only time that he isn't in frame is when we see his suitcase. This is grey and plain just like him. Flash of red on it – element of fear? – Scared of what's to come next. This is shortly followed by the sign 'do they match?' Relationship symbol.

Facial expression remains solemn – he's not happy about being home. Wearing a suit to go home, suggests he is not comfortable there.

Everyone paired with people apart from him.

Gets home and face still solemn - unhappy to be there. Fish tank suggests containment – he's trapped.
