

No one is born
without being gifted..

The problem is that most people try
to imitate and capture
other people's gifts
and make it their own

On Being a Gifted Adolescent Yvonne Larsson, 1987 Because of recent criticism of the use of standardized tests to identify gifted individuals the focus for identification of gifted adolescents has shifted to acceptance of three interrelated aspects 1 above average ability 2 task commitment and 3 creativity It is now recognized that talented individuals will only do well in circumstances that encourage development of their talents and offer emotional support

Unfortunately many misconceptions about the gifted and gifted education persist and many adults have difficulty dealing with immaturity in gifted adolescents. Although evidence is growing that gifted adolescents are more likely than others to reach adulthood without emotional or psychological difficulties, there often arise problems such as intensified stress, peer pressure, and conflicts between talent and societal expectations, particularly with girls who are expected to conform and be neat and quiet. Also important, especially in Australia, is identification of a broad concept of giftedness which would provide opportunities for girls, aboriginal students, students from non-English speaking backgrounds, and poor and rural students. A number of projects are being undertaken in Australian states to reach, encourage, and support a wide variety of gifted students. A checklist used to identify gifted underachievers, a needs assessment questionnaire, and 48 references conclude the document.

SKC To Be Young and Gifted Pnina S. Klein, Abraham J. Tannenbaum, 1992. This book offers insights into the intellectual and emotional development of exceptional children. Contributors explore the nature of giftedness and how to recognize it in youngsters, the complexities of the creative process, standardized tests, and their effectiveness in asserting potential and developmental theories, and how they relate to the identification of gifted children. Several chapters also examine young prodigies and the diversity of personalities and talents that exist among the gifted.

Coping with Being Gifted (JN). Sharon Carter, 1992. Being Smart about Gifted Children Dona J. Matthews, Joanne F. Foster, 2005. Shows how to move from the Mystery model to the Mastery model. Written for parents and educators, especially those who live and work with gifted high ability children, the authors describe ways to develop children's natural abilities. Introducing the Mystery and Mastery models of gifted education, the authors invite controversy by challenging several commonly held assumptions. They then present practical strategies to help parents and educators identify and nurture the abilities of children with high ability. This book answers the charges that special programs for gifted children are elitist. The authors demonstrate that it is simply appropriate to provide educational experiences that each child needs at a particular time.

Coping with Being Gifted Sharon Carter, Lawrence Clayton, Ruth C. Rosen, 1992-01. A discussion of how to cope with some of the problems of being a teenager of special ability, including problems with friendships, family relationships, and how to use a gift for the best.
