Brueghel-esque feel and yet there is also a self-conscious acknowledgment of modernity as well as a questioning of the authority of the author in determining meaning. At times evoking Gorey, Chaucer and the tale of Robin Hood, these fables, ghost stories and riddles of human nature dissect the individual's interaction with culture, particularly commenting on the ascribing of meaning by communal groups resulting in truth making and the limitations of our leaders, artists, philosophers, and politicians in their ability to break us out of communal indoctrination.

On Horseback Charles Dudley Warner, 2017-05-04

The way to mount a horse said the Professor. If you have no ladder put in the Friend of Humanity. The Professor had ridden through the war for the Union on the right side, enjoying a much better view of it than if he had walked and knew as much about a horse as a person ought to know for the sake of his character. The man who can recite the tales of the Canterbury Pilgrims on horseback giving the contemporary pronunciation never missing an accent by reason of the trot and at the same time witch North Carolina and a strip of East Tennessee with his noble horsemanship is a kind of Literary Centaur of whose double instruction any Friend of Humanity may be glad to avail himself. The way to mount a horse is to grasp the mane with the left hand holding the bridle rein put your left foot in the stirrup with the right hand on the back of the saddle and Just then the horse stepped quickly around on his hind feet and looked the Professor in the face. The Superintendents of Affairs who occupy the flagging in front of the hotel seated in cane bottomed chairs tilted back smiled. These useful persons appear to have a life lease of this portion of the city pavement and pretty effectually block it up nearly all day and evening. When a lady wishes to make her way through the blockade it is the habit of these observers of life to rise and make room touching their hats while she picks her way through and goes down the street with a pretty consciousness of the flutter she has caused. The war has not changed the Southern habit of sitting out of doors but has added a new element of street picturesqueness in groups of colored people lounging about the corners. There appears to be more leisure than ever. The scene of this little lesson in horsemanship was the old town of Abingdon in southwest Virginia on the Virginia and East Tennessee railway a town of ancient respectability which gave birth to the Johnstons and Floyds and other notable people a town that still preserves the flavor of excellent tobacco and something of the easy going habits of the days of slavery and is a sort of educational center where the young ladies of the region add the final graces of intellectual life in moral philosophy and the use of the globes to their natural gifts. The mansion of the late and left Floyd is now a seminary and not far from it is the Stonewall Jackson Institute in the midst of a grove of splendid oaks whose stately boles and wide spreading branches give a dignity to educational life. The distinction of the region is its superb oak trees. As it was vacation in these institutions of learning the travelers did not see any of the vines that traditionally cling to the oak.
