

Federalism

---

- There are many pros to a federal government.
- Each region may custom fit solutions to problems brought about by their distinct geographic, cultural, social and economic contexts. Regions also have more power over their finances, since they handle majority income and only contribute to a small portion to the national government.
- They can choose to directly fund their own development projects without asking for the national government's go signal.
- A federal system focus on nationwide concerns while regional governments can take care of administrative issue
