

Stage-Gate Systems: A New Tool for Managing New Products

Robert G. Cooper

New products can help your company much more quickly and efficiently with a bit of planning before development starts.

drive new products from idea to market faster and with fewer mistakes—is the key to winning this war. Sadly, many firms miss the mark: Only one product development project in four becomes a winner, and almost 50 percent of the resources American firms devote to innovation are spent on products that are commercial failures.

Stage-gate systems form one solution to what ails many firms' new product programs. Facing increased pressure to reduce the cycle time yet improve their new product "hit rate," corporations are increasingly looking to stage-gate models as effective tools to manage, direct, and control their product-innovation efforts.

What are stage-gate systems? A stage-gate system is both a conceptual and an operational model for moving a new product from idea to launch. It is a blueprint for managing the new product process to improve effectiveness and efficiency. Although conceptually quite simple, as we shall see later, the intricacies, design, and operationalization of stage-gate approaches are considerably more complex.

THE NEED FOR BETTER NEW PRODUCT MANAGEMENT

Facing increased competition from home and abroad, maturing markets, and the heightened pace of technological change, corporations look to new products and new businesses for sustained growth and competitive advantage.

The desire to develop and launch new products is obvious. The manager's bookshelf is replete with new books on managing innovation, launching new products, and managing technology. A study by the Conference Board (Hopkins 1980) revealed that, by an eight-to-one ratio, CEOs believed that their firms would be much more dependent on new products in the years ahead. A Coopers & Lybrand survey (1985) reported that most companies are counting heavily on new product development for growth and profitability.

There is good reason for this heightened interest in product innovation. An annual Fortune survey rates top American corporations on a number of criteria, including "value as a long-term investment." Using data supplied by Fortune, we studied various predictors of investment value. The results were provocative: The single strongest predictor of investment value is "degree of innovativeness of the company." A typical industry relationship—how innovativeness impacts on investment value—is shown for the chemical industry in Figure 1.

The need for effective product innovation is there; are the results? Products continue to fail at an alarmingly high rate. In one study (Hopkins 1980), 65 percent of managers felt that their new product success rate was "disappointing" or "unacceptably low." The Coopers & Lybrand survey Harnessing this often requires a special receptiveness and enthusiasm at all levels of an organization which serves to unlock potential and can turn the entire organizational pyramid upside down. It is particularly important to understand and develop those aspects of design which can be constructively employed by designers in a strategic alliance with management and research. The papers in this volume result from the conference of the Design Society held at the University of Central England in September 1998. They show how design led product development has worked in a range of industries from engineering through to design and management consultancy. Not only practitioners but also students of industrial design and management should find this a valuable contribution to the subject. Managing New Products Thomas D.
