

Narrative Perspective

Stories are often told from different perspectives. Understanding who is telling (narrating) the story will help you determine the context and reliability of the narration.

Imagine how the story of 'Macbeth' would differ if it was written from the perspective of a character, such as Lady Macbeth. When analysing narrative perspective, consider:

Do events take place in the past, present or future?

How much does the narrator know?

Is the narrator a participant in the action?

What is the motivation behind the story?

First-Person Narration

In a first-person narration, the story is told from the perspective of a character (often the protagonist). Therefore, you learn a lot about the character's background, thoughts and feelings. For example, in 'Great Expectations', Pip writes as an adult looking back on the events in his life and reflecting on his actions and decisions.

First person narratives can have an intimate and empathetic feel. However, they are subjective (based on the narrator's opinion) so can be unreliable.

In some texts and plays, such as 'Frankenstein', there is more than one narrator. This provides multiple perspectives and insights into characters' thoughts and feelings.

Third-Person Narration

In a third-person narrative, the narrator is not directly involved in the story. A 'voice' commentates on the action, and provides insight into characters' thoughts and feelings.

In omniscient narratives, the narrator knows the thoughts and feelings of all characters, which can enhance the sense of reliability. This narrative technique is used in 'Lord of the Flies' to provide an insight into characters' actions and motives.

In limited narratives, the narrator's knowledge is restricted to the thoughts and feelings of one character. This narrative is quite restrictive but is often used to create mystery and suspense.
