New Developments in Second Intermediate Period Archaeology in Egypt (ca. 1800–1550 BC)

In 2015 the project Beyond Politics: Material Culture in Second Intermediate Period Egypt and Nubia<sup>1</sup> was initiated to assess archaeological finds in their own right, independently from the historical, written sources. This approach was born out of necessity because the majority of archaeological finds do not bear dynastic affiliations. This is particularly true of the non-élite strata of ancient society.

The difficulties would not be alleviated even if such data were more frequent, because in the Second Intermediate Period (SIP) a) the sequence of pharaohs is not completely preserved<sup>2</sup> b) the reconstruction is not agreed upon<sup>3</sup> and c) numerous archaeological SIP sites do not include any king's names.

Most objects discussed here lack inscriptions or names, to demonstrate the complications and the need to add archaeological interpretations to obtain greater insight into the reconstruction of the lives of past people in the SIP. This is not to say that texts should be ignored, but the full value of archaeological finds should be used to add knowledge of the past.

1. PROJECT SCOPE AND CHRONOLOGICAL RANGE

The aims of the project are to undertake new analyses of material remains of the entire SIP, providing data for typical material culture in the various regions of Egypt (e.g. the eastern Delta, Memphis-Fayoum Region, Middle Egypt, Theban area, southern Egypt<sup>4</sup>). A representative selection of contexts from the quantity of available material is made.

In order to define the limitations of the SIP, differences to before and after need to be ascertained, thus the chronological range goes from the late Middle Kingdom (MK) to the beginning of the New Kingdom (NK). The transitional periods between the end of the MK and the SIP and the end

Culture in Law and Development Lan Cao, 2016 The growth of international law in the post World War II era stemmed partly from the belief that universal norms would make life for the entire world's population safer more equitable and more conducive to each person's acquisition of basic material needs Starting in the sixties and seventies some scholars and activists challenged this assumption and established the school of cultural relativism a model that pays deference to local cultural traditions and favors them over international human rights norms Scholars tried to create and practice a middle ground approach between universalism and relativism whereby the most egregious violations would be prevented through assimilating only jus cogens norms into indigenous groups existing cultural traditions Such efforts at combining a few select international norms with local cultural traditions largely failed Culture in Law and Development presents a provocative new solution to the seemingly intractable problem of combining international norms with local cultural traditions by changing culture through law and development In this book Lan Cao demonstrates how the gradual expansion of customary international law CIL provides a model for changing culture in ways that protect and advance local populations The book adopts a holistic view of development and argues that cultural norms that impede the human capabilities of the poor women and other marginal groups should be changed The book reveals how a more conscious coordinated effort on such change can succeed while non violative local traditions are otherwise honored and preserved Cao proposes that cultural change does not have to constitute cultural disrespect and that local societies only benefit by a careful combination of externally wrought change and internally fostered tradition The Statesman's Yearbook 2014 B.
