Operation Morning Light:

Operation Morning Light Leo Heaps, 1978 Examines the events prior to and following the crash of Cosmos 954 Written by a southerner the book suffers from factual errors and obvious prejudice Operation Morning Light ,2018 Cosmos 954 a Soviet nuclear powered satellite launched in September 1977 in Kazakhstan re entered the earth s atmosphere in the early morning hours of 24 January 1978 The United States which had mobilized its nuclear emergency response team NEST in early January and Canada which activated its Nuclear Accident Support Team NAST on 20 January responded Their search activities under the designation Operation Morning Light determined that radioactive satellite debris had survived re entry and reached the ground Their subsequent clean up operations sought to safeguard the welfare of Northern Canadians living in the affected area By critically evaluating the methods equipment and personnel employed during Morning Light this recently declassified military report published for the first time explains how the combination of civilian scientific expertise with military capabilities succeeded in overcoming large distances across a frigid subarctic environment to effectively locate and recover the radioactive remnants of Cosmos 954 Operation Morning Light ,2007 Cosmos 954 a Soviet nuclear powered satellite launched in September 1977 in Kazakhstan re entered the earth s atmosphere in the early morning hours of 24 January 1978 The United States which had mobilized its nuclear emergency response team NEST in early January and Canada which activated its Nuclear Accident Support Team NAST on 20 January responded Their search activities under the designation Operation Morning Light determined that radioactive satellite debris had survived re entry and reached the ground Their subsequent clean up operations sought to safeguard the welfare of Northern Canadians living in the affected area By critically evaluating the methods equipment and personnel employed during Morning Light this recently declassified military report published for the first time explains how the combination of civilian scientific expertise with military capabilities succeeded in overcoming large distances across a frigid subarctic environment to effectively locate and recover the radioactive remnants of Cosmos 954 Kosmos 954 and Operation Morning Light Charles River Editors, 2019-09-10 Includes pictures Includes a bibliography for further reading We are just not good enough to tell New York City for instance that a satellite is coming and will knock King Kong off the Empire State Building at 2 P M Lieutenant Colonel Yanchev Space Defense Center chief 1978 Wilford Jan 29 1978 1 In the predawn sky of northern Canada on the morning of January 24th 1978 a long streak of blue fire suddenly rushed across the starry vista northeast of the remote town of Yellowknife Those out on the bitterly cold night with a temperature many tens of degrees below zero Fahrenheit saw a brilliant leading object sheathed in flames blue or bluish red and shining with incandescent intensity Other smaller objects or fragments shed off it arcing or tumbling earthwards on their own trajectories Even in this remote location a number of individuals saw and reported the unusual phenomenon Out under the starry dome of the distant north where celestial objects appeared with burning clarity through the frigid pure air they watched the apparition until it vanished in the northeast somewhere far over

Great Slave Lake One such observer a native of the Dog Rib tribe named Jimmy Doctor recounted what he saw That night I saw it I was listening to the radio at home when I heard some noise behind the house So I got up to see what it was It was a dog howling into the sky beside my skidoo I looked up into the sky to see if the moon was still shining That was when I seen the big flame going north east I ran outside to see what it was I thought it was a plane on fire I didn t know what it was It sounded like air coming out of a tire That was the way I saw the satellite Heaps 1978 54 Of the relatively few people who witnessed it most assumed they witnessed a burning passenger jet crashing One thought that it might have something to do with lasers after seeing a program about them on television Others observing its speed and unusual appearance recognized they had not seen a crashing aircraft but had no ready explanation for it at all Conversely Canadian and American officials knew precisely what the people of Yellowknife and the surrounding areas witnessed Within a short time teams of scientists and security experts boarded aircraft to converge on the deep wilderness where the Soviet spy satellite Kosmos 954 had just crashed into the atmosphere and burned up over Great Slave Lake strewn radioactive debris over an area of approximately 48 000 square miles Those efforts would kick off one of the most unique environmental operations in history Kosmos 954 and Operation Morning Light The History of Efforts to Contain Radioactive Debris Spread across Canada by a Soviet Satellite examines how the satellite malfunctioned the disastrous results and efforts to clean up the radioactivity Along with pictures depicting important people places and events you will learn about Operation Morning Light like never before Defusing Armageddon: Inside NEST, America's Secret Nuclear Bomb Squad Jeffrey Richelson, 2009-02-02 Richelson reveals the history of America s super secret government agency Nuclear Emergency Support Team NEST Defusing Armageddon provides a behind the scenes look at NEST s personnel operations and detection and disablement equipment 16 pages of illustrations 4 maps The Nuclear North Susan Colbourn, Timothy Andrews Sayle, 2020-10-01 Since the first atomic weapon was detonated in 1945 Canadians have debated not only the role of nuclear power in their uranium rich land but also their country s role in a nuclear world The Nuclear North investigates critical questions in these ongoing debates Should Canada belong to international alliances that depend on the threat of using nuclear weapons for their own security Should Canadian produced nuclear technologies be exported to potential proliferators Does the country s championing of arms control and disarmament on the global stage matter What about the domestic costs of nuclear technologies and atomic research including their impact on local communities and the environment The contributors to this important collection consider how the atomic age has shaped Canadian policies at home and abroad Their incisive assessment of the country s nuclear history engages with much larger debates about national identity Canadian foreign policy contradictions during the Cold War and Canada s place in the international order Cold Science Stephen Bocking, Daniel Heidt, 2019-03-07 Science during the Cold War has become a matter of lively interest within the historical research community attracting the attention of scholars concerned with the history of science the Cold War and environmental history The Arctic recognized as a frontier of confrontation between the superpowers and consequently central to the Cold War has also attracted much attention This edited collection speaks to this dual interest by providing innovative and authoritative analyses of the history of Arctic science during the Cold War

Memories of Mistrust and Contamination Ellen Power, 2019 On January 24 1978 the nuclear powered Soviet satellite Cosmos 954 burned up over the Northwest Territories Radioactive satellite debris dispersed across hundreds of square kilometres of land including several communities Working with nuclear emergency teams from the United States the Canadian military undertook a months long operation to recover this hazardous debris from the landscape Government accounts of Operation Morning Light highlighted the mission's successes in locating harmful debris emphasizing the negligible risk that most debris posed to the predominantly Dene and Métis communities affected These authoritative narratives obscured the legacies of Cosmos 954 in communities like Lutsel K'e and Fort Resolution where people still question the effects of Cosmos 954 on their traditional land Denendeh Their memories of the event reveal a lingering mistrust of government risk assessments and an ongoing uncertainty about the hazards of Cosmos 954 debris especially as part of larger concerns about environmental contamination in Denendeh

Crisis Contained Philip Louis Cantelon, Robert Chadwell Williams, 1982 What escaped at Three Mile Island was not only radiation but more importantly for the nuclear power industry public confidence in technology and technocracy report Cantelon and Williams in their detailed account of the response of the Department of Energy to America's worst civilian nuclear power accident What happened at Three Mile Island was a technological failure of monstrous proportions Yet the authors contend the serious extent of the accident was caused by human error technocrats blundered lost control of technology and refusing to admit it gave confusing inconsistent and jargon laden explanations There was a welter of information and misinformation To sift out the truth that would enable them to write the history of this contemporary event Cantelon and Williams relied on unpublished archival materials including logs of scientists and government officials on oral interviews with participants and on reports of other government agencies The result is a significant history one that shows how scientists and politicians responded to the unbelievable and unexpected as they tried to deal with a highly technical event in the glare of television lights and under the inquisitive and fearful eyes of the public The danger was never real yet for the nation and certainly for the immediate community around Three Mile Island risk perceived was risk endured Many of the residents of what became a war zone will never be the same though radiation never touched them Imagination and unconscious fears were far more important than any accurate perception of risk after a Nuclear Regulatory Commission official used the term meltdown at a Friday afternoon news conference
