Introduction

What is "Rehabilitation"? John Conrad (U.S. Department of Justice: 1973:22) suggests that rehabilitation is the process which makes it possible for an institutionalised and ostracised individual to function as a responsible citizen by enabling him to exercise his rights to meet his obligations.

This does not address the dilemma of rehabilitation should the individual not have rights or the resources necessary to meet his obligations.

This paper will examine the likelihood of successful rehabilitation for two contrasting examples:

- a) of an individual whose primary material needs cannot be met;
- b) of an individual whose material needs can be realised and whose primary requirements would be social and personal rehabilitation.

Rehabilitation cannot be considered independently of the consequences of imprisonment. A review of these issues will lead to the question of whether rehabilitation can be realised for the majority of those passing through the prison system. The dilemma for the social worker, questioning the likelihood of rehabilitation, is how to address the needs of the individual who although damaged by the system must continue to function within it.
