Benning,1983 The oxygen index is established by ASTM as a standard measurement for the comparison of the flammability of plastics in Measuring the Minimum Oxygen Concentration to Support Candle Like Combustion of Plastics D 2863 The index is measured at atmospheric pressure Measurements of oxygen index and burning rate at absolute pressures to 2 MPa 20 atm have been made at 25 C for six materials polytetrafluoroethylene Viton neoprene nylon glass filled nylon and polymethylmethacrylate The oxygen index was found to decrease with increasing pressure but to be independent of Reynolds number up to 1500 At the oxygen index the burning rate was found to be independent of pressure The data are correlated by a model that defines the oxygen index as a point of constant oxygen diffusion rate It is concluded that with the exception of nylon the ranking of materials for oxygen service at elevated pressures by their atmospheric pressure oxygen index is not changed The index for nylon ranks it on the high side because at lower pressures hot liquid is lost from the test specimen and does not burn    Measurement of Oxygen Transfer in Clean Water American Society of Civil Engineers,2007 Standard ASCE EWRI 2 06 provides the latest methods for measuring the rate of oxygen transfer from diffused gas and mechanical oxygenation devices to water    A Polarographic Sensor for Measurement of Oxygen in Gases David N.
