

Lactation

During the initial period of lactation, the presence of milk in the breast stimulates the Hypothalamus, which releases oxytocin, which causes milk synthesis and milk release.

When the baby starts to suck at the breast, a chemical stimulus is sent to the suckling area, which causes milk synthesis and milk release.

Milk synthesis increases the quantity of milk, which stimulates the suckling area again. This creates a positive feedback loop.

Milk gathers at the nipple and is released into the baby's mouth.
