

The background of the slide is a historical painting depicting a battle scene. In the upper left, a soldier in a red tunic and helmet is shown in profile, walking towards the right. The rest of the painting shows a large, dark, and chaotic pile of bodies and armor on a grassy field, suggesting a site of mass casualties. The overall tone is somber and historical.

on the Western Front Ian M. Brown, 1998-01-26 This work examines the evolution of the British Expeditionary Force's BEF's logistic and administrative infrastructure in France and its impact on operations. In so doing it challenges the popular notion of British generals as bungling incompetents by analyzing an all too often ignored but crucial facet of military campaigns. While the BEF may be found wanting in some areas, administration was not one of them. The British generals proved themselves to be thoroughly modern professional officers in the manner in which they solved the ongoing crises that attended the explosive growth of the BEF and its artillery intensive style of warfare. This study reinvigorates the debate about World War I by examining the understudied field of logistics.
