Morecambe Bay:

Morecambe Bay John Morrison, 2008-10-23 Morecambe Bay is usually claimed to be the largest bay in the United Kingdom at over 200 square miles and over half of this area is revealed as sand at low tide The resulting landscape of channels quicksands and tidal races is unique and it is surrounded by some of the most beautiful landscapes in the British Isles but the shipbuilders of Barrow in Furness the power station at Heysham the fishermen at Fleetwood and the holiday makers in the resort of Morecambe itself speak of old and new industry and leisure while Furness Abbey and Cartmel Priory recall much older inhabitants For a landscape photographer there is a constantly changing seascape of big skies with shimmering sands wild birds in profusion and picturesque villages and noble and more modest houses John Morrison records all this in its full diversity and in all its moods Around Morecambe Bay William Reginald Mitchell, 2005 Morecambe Bay has been described as a great inner sea Low tide reveals a tawny desert 120 square miles in extent Crossing the Sands and the estuaries of Keer and Kent was once part of a daring west coast route linking Lancashire with its northern territory of Furness A milestone on the Cartmel peninsula gives the distance to Lancaster over sands as 15 miles less than half that of the land route via Kendal The safe passage of travellers was ensured by appointed guides Fishermen from Morecambe used trawlers known as nobbies and were part of a lively coastal trade At low tide the horse and cart fishermen would take to the sands seeking shrimp In his inimitable and entertaining style the author follows the shoreline showing the unique points of interest of each area Ulverston has a lighthouse at Dalton clog irons and red earth hint at an industrial past Furness Abbey was one of the richest in the north country Barrow rose from a hamlet to become the world's biggest centre for iron and steel in Victorian times This fascinating book will interest visitors and residents alike Carlisle and Silloth Bay Dock and Railway Bill Minutes of Evidence and Proceedings.
