Measuring Patient Outcomes

Measuring Patient Outcomes:

Measuring Patient Outcomes Marie T. Nolan, Victoria Mock, 2000-01-24 Using the statistical analysis program SPSS this book shows how to analyze patient outcomes data and create graphs summarizing this data. The first part of this book serves as a primer for nurses and other health professionals who are learning how to measure outcomes. The second part includes a series of case studies describing successful patient outcomes projects. The examples selected range from the straightforward assessment of length of stay and re-admission rate before and after the introduction of a care pathway to the more complicated efforts to assess the impact of swimming on central venous catheter infection in children with cancer. Some chapters represent the starting point for outcomes measurement while other chapters are built upon previous work.

Health Care Outcomes Suzanne Smith Blancett, Dominick L. Flarey, 1998 The transformation in the health care industry begun over a decade ago will continue well into the 21st century. And the dominant theme in the new millennium is likely to be collaborative practice and outcomes-based health care delivery. A collection of the most current and innovative presentations in path-based collaborative practices, this book focuses on the design, implementation, and analysis of outcomes for the heavy volume DRGs. For each DRG, the authors present two to three standard clinical pathways and then show how those pathways can be manipulated to alter outcomes. Health Care Outcomes covers topics in Respiratory, Neonatal, Pediatric, General Surgery, Orthopaedic, and Geriatric Care. A comprehensive collection of critical pathways and outcomes maps being used by leading hospitals and health care agencies around the country, this is an important reference for developing path-based care models or revising critical paths and outcomes maps.

Measuring Quality Outcomes in Patient Care, 2008 As healthcare and health systems become increasingly complex, expectations of what constitutes high quality care continue to evolve. Stakeholders now require contemporary and meaningful measures of system performance. As such, valid healthcare quality metrics are rapidly becoming essential for those providing and receiving healthcare to assess performance and motivate change. This thesis investigates the utility of quality indicators in trauma care. Multiple in-hospital indicators have been promulgated by various bodies for assessing quality of trauma care. The properties of ideal indicators have been widely documented; however, few published data have reported these properties for many trauma measures. The emphasis on trauma process measures (e.g. time to interventions) highlights the need for indicators with known links to patient outcomes. This process-outcome link may be viewed as a measure of an indicator's construct validity. As this property is unknown for many trauma indicators, this thesis focuses on the construct validity of a number of routinely utilised trauma indicators. In this thesis, the available in-hospital indicators proposed by The American College of Surgeons Committee on Trauma and additional indicators used in the Victorian State Trauma System were investigated for their relationships with patient outcomes. A small number of indicators were found to have statistically significant relationships with patient outcomes; however, many indicators demonstrated counter-intuitive relationships whereby high quality care was linked with poorer patient outcomes. These results suggested that links between indicators and outcomes may not be best measured using individual indicators for individual patients. Rather a strategy for measuring patient outcomes at the hospital level may be needed. To combine multiple indicators into a single measure of hospital level performance a number of composite methods were explored using two trauma registries. Three composite weighting schemes were employed. As composite measures are often used for provider ranking or benchmarking the stability of hospital ranks between providers and over time was investigated. The composites were found to have moderate to strong correlations (0.76–0.99) however variability in composite hospital rankings existed particularly for middle ranking facilities. The construct validity of each available indicator and composite score was investigated through the relationship with hospital level risk adjusted mortality using Poisson regression models risk adjusting for expected deaths using the TRISS formulation. Each composite measure demonstrated a significant association with mortality with the mortality decrease across the middle 50% of each composite score ranging from 12.06%–16.13%. These findings suggest that complex measures such as trauma composite indices may be better able to measure the interactions between processes within complex systems that influence quality of care. This thesis adds valuable insight into the use of indicators for assessing quality of care in trauma systems. The combination of individual indicators into composite forms appears to strengthen the construct validity of these measures. By demonstrating the process outcome link for trauma composite indices this thesis has identified a means of utilising process measures to assess hospital level performance that may become important for future public reporting and hospital funding schemes.

Nursing Outcomes
Doran, 2010-05-24 physical edition. Nursing Outcomes State of the Science is an invaluable resource for nurse researchers, scholars and health care professionals committed to effective quality nursing care as evidenced by nursing sensitive outcomes measurement. This text concentrates on outcome indicators which focus on how patients and their conditions are affected by their interaction with nursing staff. Each chapter includes a concept analysis of the outcome concept then defining characteristics are identified and a conceptual definition is proposed. Factors that influence the outcome concept are discussed as well as the consequences for clients health and well being. The strength of the evidence is reviewed concerning the sensitivity of the outcome concept to nursing structure variables and nursing processes interventions. The author offers a comprehensive synthesis of the literature, critically reviews the quality of the evidence and provides direction for the selection of outcome variables.

Measuring the Impact of Interprofessional Education on Collaborative Practice and Patient Outcomes Institute of Medicine, Board on Global Health, Committee on Measuring the Impact of Interprofessional Education on Collaborative Practice and Patient Outcomes, 2015-12-15. Interprofessional teamwork and collaborative practice are emerging as key elements of efficient and productive work in promoting health and treating patients. The vision for these collaborations is one where different health and or social professionals share a team identity and work closely together to solve problems and improve delivery of care. Although the value of interprofessional education (IPE) has been embraced around the world particularly for its impact on learning many in leadership positions have questioned how IPE affects patient population and health system outcomes This question cannot be fully answered without well designed studies and these studies cannot be conducted without an understanding of the methods and measurements needed to conduct such an analysis This Institute of Medicine report examines ways to measure the impacts of IPE on collaborative practice and health and system outcomes According to this report it is possible to link the learning process with downstream person or population directed outcomes through thoughtful well designed studies of the association between IPE and collaborative behavior Measuring the Impact of Interprofessional Education on Collaborative Practice and Patient Outcomes describes the research needed to strengthen the evidence base for IPE outcomes Additionally this report presents a conceptual model for evaluating IPE that could be adapted to particular settings in which it is applied Measuring the Impact of Interprofessional Education on Collaborative Practice and Patient Outcomes addresses the current lack of broadly applicable measures of collaborative behavior and makes recommendations for resource commitments from interprofessional stakeholders funders and policy makers to advance the study of IPE DHHS Publication No. (NIH). ,1991 Cardiovascular Outcomes
