T. O'Kane,1987     The Politics of Economic Restructuring and Democracy in Africa Obioma M. Iheduru,1999-06-30 In a bold attempt to develop an innovative theory of political change arising from dual economic and political transformations Iheduru maintains that economic structural adjustment policies have unintended political consequences leading to democratic liberalization in post colonial African states Using classical dependency and neoliberal approaches as a backdrop he demonstrates that structural adjustment policies shaped by conditionality measures foster the operation of free enterprise market forces As a social consequence of the reform effort winners and losers organize to protect their interests first in the economy and later in the political arena Thus the structural reorientation of African economies leads not only to the ascendancy of the market and economic growth but also to the political opening of the African state thereby facilitating the participation of excluded groups In conclusion Iheduru predicts that structural adjustment is the best policy alternative for initiating and sustaining meaningful economic changes in Africa Moreover he claims it may be a deciding factor in the possible democratizing of the African continent which would provide an auspicious atmosphere for a properly functioning market economy     Relative Modernization and Public Resource Allocation in Kenya Nicholas Nyangira,1975 Monograph on relative modernization and public resource allocation in Kenya analyses four aspects of public expenditure allocation agriculture commerce education and self help projects and the definition of modernization Bibliography pp 157 to 169 references and statistical tables     National Security In The Third World 'Abd al-Mun'im
