New Product Diffusion Models:

New-Product Diffusion Models Vijay Mahajan, Eitan Muller, Yoram Wind, 2000-09-30 Product sales especially for new products are influenced by many factors. These factors are both internal and external to the selling organization and are both controllable and uncontrollable. Due to the enormous complexity of such factors, it is not surprising that product failure rates are relatively high. Indeed, new product failure rates have variously been reported as between 40 and 90 percent. Despite this multitude of factors, marketing researchers have not been deterred from developing and designing techniques to predict or explain the levels of new product sales over time. The proliferation of the internet, the necessity of developing a road map to plan the launch and exit times of various generations of a product, and the shortening of product life cycles are challenging firms to investigate market penetration or innovation diffusion models. These models not only provide information on new product sales over time but also provide insight on the speed with which a new product is being accepted by various buying groups such as those identified as innovators, early adopters, early majority, late majority, and laggards. New Product Diffusion Models aims to distill, synthesize, and integrate the best thinking that is currently available on the theory and practice of new product diffusion models. This state-of-the-art assessment includes contributions by individuals who have been at the forefront of developing and applying these models in industry. The book's twelve chapters are written by a combined total of thirty-two experts who together represent twenty-five different universities and other organizations in Australia, Europe, Hong Kong, Israel, and the United States. The book will be useful for researchers and students in marketing and technological forecasting, as well as those in other allied disciplines who study relevant aspects of innovation diffusion. Practitioners in high-tech and consumer durable industries should also gain new insights from New Product Diffusion Models. The book is divided into five parts: I Overview, II Strategic Global and Digital Environments for Diffusion Analysis, III Diffusion Models, IV Estimation and V Applications and Software. The final section includes a PC-based software program developed by Gary L. Lilien and Arvind Rangaswamy, 1998, to implement the Bass diffusion model. A case on high-definition television is included to illustrate the various features of the software. A free 15-day trial access period for the updated software can be downloaded from <http://www.mktgeng.com/diffusionbook>. Among the book's many highlights are chapters addressing the implications posed by the internet, globalization, and production policies upon diffusion of new products and technologies in the population. An Examination of New Product Diffusion Models Jean-Pierre van de Capelle, Rochester Institute of Technology. Printing Industry Center, 2004. This paper is based on the book New Product Diffusion Models Mahajan Muller Wind 2000 and is organized as follows. The summary presents a short overview of the book which addresses many issues of new product diffusion as well as some models that describe such diffusion processes. Among them are the basic Bass diffusion and multi-state flow models. The Interpretations section provides an in-depth discussion illustrating the author's view of multi-state flow models and their relation to new product diffusion models. This section goes beyond the material covered in the book and is intended to provide the reader with a better understanding of the Bass model and its underlying assumptions This section also includes a discussion on parameter extraction techniques which is continued in subsequent sections The application of the Bass diffusion model for the Xerox DocuTech family of products is discussed The application of the Bass diffusion model in the digital color press market is also discussed The outcome of this investigation shows that the Bass model requires from 6 to 10 years of sales to be a valid sales model and that the model functions better if the market size is known The examples show however that once a few years of data are available and the market size is known the model can predict sales quite accurately for a long time into the future with very good precision

A Stochastic Formulation of the Bass Model of New-Product Diffusion Shun Chen Niu, 2002 In the past several decades new product diffusion models has been an active area of research in marketing see e g Mahajan Muller and Wind 2000 and Mahajan and Wind 1986 Such models are useful because they can provide important insights into the timing of initial purchase of new products by consumers Much of the work in this area has been spawned by a seminal paper of Bass 1969 in which it was postulated that the trajectory of cumulative adoptions of a new product follows a deterministic function whose instantaneous growth rate depends on two parameters one of which captures a consumer s intrinsic tendency to purchase independent of the number of previous adopters and the other captures a positive force of influence on a consumer by previous adopters While Bass s model or the Bass Model BM yields an S shaped cumulative adoptions curve that has proven to provide excellent empirical fit for a wide range of new product adoptions data sets especially for consumer durables there also has been a common belief see e g Eliashberg and Chatterjee 1986 that it would be of interest to have an appropriate stochastic version of his model The purpose of this paper is to formulate and study a stochastic counterpart of the BM Inspired by a very early paper of Taga and Isii 1959 we formulate the trajectory of cumulative number of adoptions as a pure birth process with a set of state dependent birth rates that are judiciously chosen to closely parallel the roles played by the two parameters in the deterministic BM We demonstrate that with our choice of birth rates the resulting pure birth process exhibits characteristics that resemble those in the BM In particular we show that the fraction of individuals who have adopted the product by time t in our formulation agrees with converges in probability to the corresponding deterministic fraction in a BM with the same pair of parameters when the total number of consumers in the target population approaches infinity Our formulation therefore supports and expands the BM by having explicit micro level stochastic interactions amongst individual adopters

Incorporating Consumer Resistance to Innovation in a New Product Diffusion Model Ai-Hwa Chang, 1992 This dissertation proposes a new diffusion model for an innovation in durable goods markets and compares the model with four existing models The distinctive feature of the new diffusion model is an explicit consideration of the competition between an existing product and a new product due to the comparative advantage of the new product and also due to the closer introduction times of the existing product and the new product Adopting an individual level modeling approaching this diffusion model incorporates the phenomena of interaction of evaluations for successive generation innovations risk adjusted utility of the new product increased new product utility over time and the Bayesian process of uncertainty reduction The proposed model has been compared with existing models using both empirical data from the color TV market and computer simulated market data The comparison criteria are 1 goodness of fit in model estimation samples and 2 forecast accuracy in model validation samples The results of empirical comparison show that the proposed model performs better than the compared models on both criteria The results of computer simulation comparison show that the proposed model and Lattin and Roberts 1989 RAU model are the two best models with the latter being better than the former on goodness of fit in seven of twenty eight market types and the former being better than the latter on the accuracy of one step ahead sales forecasting in twenty six markets In addition in markets characterized by strong consumer resistance the proposed model is superior to the RAU model on both performance criteria The proposed model is also superior to the Bass model 1969 a first order autoregressive model and the Lattin and Roberts 1989 model with price consideration in all the markets examined Besides the superiority of the proposed model to these three models increases more often in markets in which diffusion deterring factors are present Therefore the proposed model has demonstrated its superior capabilities in modeling the diffusion of a new product in an environment characterized by stronger consumer resistance Managerial implications of the proposed model in new product prelaunch forecasting and post introduction adoption diagnosis are also discussed New Product Diffusion Models with Stochastic Parameters Yongchang Chen,1987

A Comparative Study on New Product Diffusion Models: a Scanner Data Based Study Andreas Frank Mayer,Carleton University. Dissertation. Forecasting Fluid Milk Package Type with a Multi-Generation New Product Diffusion Model Mark Speece, 2015 New product forecasting often focuses only on the new product itself neglecting the fact that older technologies remain on the market to provide competition Multi generation innovation diffusion models are available but have only rarely been tested on actual data Furthermore although causal factors such as pricing have been incorporated into single generation models little has been done to include causal factors in multi generation models A recently introduced multi generation model developed for high technology industries and tested on a thigh tech product class is used here to forecast use of three generations of packaging technology in the fluid milk market glass paperboard cartons and plastic Results show that the model can be successfully applied to industries not usually associated with high technology and to specific markets rather than across a whole product class the model is extended by incorporating pricing which brings about slight improvements in already good forecasts Innovation Diffusion Models of New Product Acceptance Vijay Mahajan, 1985

Advanced Methods for Modeling Markets Peter S. H. Lee, Jaap E. Wieringa, Tammo H.A. Bijmolt, Koen H. Pauwels, 2017-08-29 This volume presents advanced techniques to modeling markets with a wide spectrum of topics including advanced individual demand models time series analysis state space models spatial models structural models mediation models that specify competition and diffusion models It is intended as a follow on and companion to Modeling Markets 2015 in which the authors presented the basics of modeling markets along the classical steps of the model building process specification data collection estimation validation and implementation This volume builds on the concepts presented in Modeling Markets with an emphasis on advanced methods that are used to specify estimate and validate marketing models including structural equation models partial least squares mixture models and hidden Markov models as well as generalized methods of moments Bayesian analysis non semi parametric estimation and endogeneity issues Specific attention is given to big data The market environment is changing rapidly and constantly Models that provide information about the sensitivity of market behavior to marketing activities such as advertising pricing promotions and distribution are now routinely used by managers for the identification of changes in marketing programs that can improve brand performance In today s environment of information overload the challenge is to make sense of the data that is being provided globally in real time from thousands of sources Although marketing models are now widely accepted the quality of the marketing decisions is critically dependent upon the quality of the models on which those decisions are based This volume provides an authoritative and comprehensive review with each chapter including an introduction to the method methodology a numerical example application in marketing references to other marketing applications suggestions about software Featuring contributions from top authors in the field this volume will explore current and future aspects of modeling markets providing relevant and timely research and techniques to scientists researchers students academics and practitioners in marketing management and economics
