Governance in the Twenty-first Century Canadian Centre for Management Development, 2000 Numerous administrative reforms during the past several decades referred to as the New Public Management have altered government in a number of fundamental ways These changes have in turn produced the need for even greater change if the public sector is to be capable of governing efficiently and responsibly The challenges now facing government are numerous including the need to recruit capable and committed young public servants adapt to new information technology manage changing intergovernmental relations and perhaps most important hold the reformed administrative structures accountable to both political demands and legal standards Some countries have already initiated new rounds of reform while others are still attempting to understand and absorb the consequences of changes motivated by new public management ideas In Governance in the twenty first century international experts recognise both the difficulty of making predictions and the need to consider the future in order to prepare the public sector for new challenges The authors predictions and recommendations are anchored in a thorough understanding of contemporary public administration They point out that not only have previous reforms made yet more change necessary and inevitable but that the purpose of these reforms is to attempt to return government to the position of respect and competence it enjoyed in the past B Guy Peters is Maurice Falk Professor of American Government Department of Political Science University of Pittsburgh Donald J Savoie holds the Clement Cormier Chair in Economic Development at the Universit de Moncton where he also teaches public administration The New Public Management Paul J.

De Vries,2015 The last decades a transformation of the public sector under the label of New Public Management was seen NPM was especially supported for its novel ideas on including private sector practices such as performance management in the delivery of public sector services and for its idea to substitute the public sector by the private sector With the benefit of hindsight one can conclude now that the success rates of such reforms varied Whether the role of government and its strength is really determinative in shaping optimal models for service delivery is one of the main questions in the current debate and is also one of the reasons for inviting a number of scholars from countries in transition that is outside the usual realm of investigation to tell about and analyze the developments in this regard in their home countries First of all these are scholars from the so called BRICS countries that strange group of nation states from several parts of the world of which the first letters of their names constitute the word BRICS namely Brazil Russia India China and South Africa Secondly scholars from Central and Eastern Europe were invited to write about the experiences in their countries The central question these scholars focus on is how two New Public Management Tools evolved in their countries that is performance management and involving the private sector in previously public service delivery and what problems these countries encountered New Public Management in Africa Benon C. Basheka, Lukamba-Muhiya. Tshombe, 2017-08-25 The administrative sciences have been dominated by a turn to managerial perspectives in the late 20th and early 21st centuries and in the spirit of this turn New Public Management or NPM promises to produce efficient responsible and client oriented public services The reforms carried out in the pursuit of New Public Management are often accompanied by great optimism and rapid enthusiastic steps toward implementation Even in highly developed industrial countries however these fundamental reforms often overlook the political and cultural contexts of the implementing country New Public Management in Africa Emerging Issues and Lessons provides much needed theoretical foundations for NPM reforms in the African context and reflects on the success of existing reforms in the development of several African states The individual contributions in this timely volume provide important analyses of academic discourse practical policy achievements and desiderata The book as a whole however provides a valuable impetus for public administration research in and on African states sharing findings on the results of reforms to date and adjustments required for these reforms to succeed For public administration researchers outside of Africa this book offers a review of New Public Management case studies that are unavailable or difficult to find elsewhere contributing much to the exchange between African and Western administration science research and demonstrating that African administrative research is well prepared to help resolve global challenges
