you make decisions when you aren't sure where you are heading If you know where you are going it is relatively simply put a plan in place and execute But if you don't know where you are going a completely different way of making decisions is required And this way of making decisions is not taught in schools or in professional education yet drive our most important decisions in life This book is the result of a nearly two decade search by Michael Dean Thomas a Chartered Accountant by training After eight years working for investment banks in Singapore he was summoned into a meeting room with human resources and given his marching orders It didn't take long to feel like he had stepped into a blackhole Despite his education he didn't have a clue on where he was heading He discovered an old form of psychotherapy called Transactional Analysis which describes how healthy people naturally switch between childlike adult and parent states of thinking He studied the best decision makers to see which ego states they used to make their most important decisions This led him to develop exercises that would accelerate the natural process of switching between divergent childlike thinking convergent adult thinking and execution He uses these techniques in his research and consulting business at www DecisionMaking Institute With your copy of Discover the Life You Were Meant to Live with Organic Thinking today you'll Overcome the limitations that professional training places on your decision making ability Distinguish best choices where there is a best outcome from hard choices where there is no objectively better outcome and where you will need to use hunch gut and intuition to decide
