NFL notebook: Are Colts rusty or ready?

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — The Indianapolis Colts felt like they spent last week at boot camp.

Four-time MVP Peyton Manning tested himself against his own defense, the tempo was quick and the intensity increased. To first-year coach Jim Caldwell, this is how you use a bye week to get ready — not rusty — for the playoffs.

"It really got the competitive juices flowing," defensive end Dwight Freeney said. "The only difference between a game and a hard practice for the defense is the finishing of a tackle. We are going full speed. We are running and we are fighting."

Worried Colts fans couldn't seek a better endorsement for change, though they'll certainly withhold judgment about the effectiveness of Caldwell's new tactics until seeing results.

The annual debate over Indy's playoff preparation has generated national attention this year because of the team's decision to rest starters and focus on the postseason rather than playing for a perfect season.

"To first-year coach Jim Caldwell..." is a transition from the fact into the quote.

Words such as: "according to the coach," or "To..." provide smooth transitions into a quote or new fact without asserting an opinion.
