Mitigation Banking Theory And Practice:

Mitigation Banking David Salvesen,Lindell L. Marsh,Douglas R. Porter,2013-04-10 Under the Clean Water Act development that results in the permanent destruction of wetlands must in most cases be mitigated by the creation of a new wetland or the restoration of a degraded one In recent years the concept of mitigation banking has emerged Rather than require developers to create and maintain wetlands on their own on a quid pro quo basis mitigation banking allows them to pay for wetlands that have been created and maintained properly by others to compensate for their damage The contributors to this volume provide an overview of mitigation banking experience in the United States examine the key issues and concerns from providing assurances to determining the value of credits and describe the practice of developing and operating a mitigation bank Topics include history and current experience of mitigation banking policies and concerns of local state and federal agencies economics of mitigation banking funding management and operation of banks starting a mitigation bank Tradeable Permits Policy Evaluation, Design and Reform OECD,2004-05-11 This publication offers valuable lessons for applying tradeable permits and provides links between policy evaluation and policy making general

Wetland Mitigation and Compensation Kenneth W. Cox, 1998 This report summarizes proceedings of a workshop that addresses past current thinking activity regarding developmental pressures on wetlands and outlines how to minimize impacts on wetlands or wetland systems. It also provides some recommendations for future action to further document act on wetland developmental pressures in Canada. Topics covered include wetland mitigation compensation initiatives in the United States Canada fish habitat mitigation compensation the policy setting for implementation of wetland mitigation and Ontario experience with a no loss wetland policy

National Wetland Mitigation Banking Study. Commercial Wetland Mitigation Credit Markets: Theory and Practice, 1995 The primary Federal regulatory program governing wetlands is authorized by Section 404 of the Clean Water Act. Similarly structured state and local permit programs also exist. In most instances wetlands permitting is by formal regulation expected to follow a mitigation sequence where the applicant for a permit must first show that the proposed activity has been designed to avoid wetlands to the maximum extent. If avoidance is not possible then the minimization of filling must be achieved. Finally if a permit is granted compensation by restoration of degraded wetlands or by creation of wetlands from uplands is required on site as close as possible to the permitted activity. Also the same kind of wetland is to be provided. At times permittees have been allowed to compensate by developing a single off site compensation project when on site possibilities for wetlands construction or restoration are limited. Some permit applicants who expect to initiate several future projects requiring mitigation have been allowed to meet these requirements by been allowed to meet these requirements by developing one large off site mitigation project. This is the general definition of a single user wetland mitigation bank or a joint project bank if the bank is developed and used jointly by more than one sponsor. However most permit applicants have only one or a few prospective projects of too small a size to warrant developing a single user bank. In such cases permit applicants could potentially satisfy their mitigation requirements by purchasing mitigation credits some measure of wetland function and area from a commercial credit supply venture e.g. a commercial mitigation bank

Wetland and Riparian Areas of the Intermountain West Mark C. McKinstry, Wayne A. Hubert, Stanley H. Anderson, 2004-07-01 Wetlands and riparian areas between the Rocky Mountains and the Sierra Nevada are incredibly diverse and valuable habitats. More than 80 percent of the wildlife species in this intermountain region depend on these wetlands which account for less than 2 percent of the land area for their survival. At the same time the wetlands also serve the water needs of ranchers and farmers recreationists vacation communities and cities. It is no exaggeration to call water the liquid gold of the West and the burgeoning human demands on this scarce resource make it imperative to understand and properly manage the wetlands and riverine areas of the Intermountain West. This book offers land managers, biologists and research scientists a state of the art survey of the ecology and management practices of wetland and riparian areas in the Intermountain West. Twelve articles examine such diverse issues as laws and regulations affecting these habitats, the unique physiographic features of the region, the importance of wetlands and riparian areas to fish, wildlife and livestock, the ecological function of these areas, their value to humans and the methods to evaluate these habitats. The authors also address the human impacts on the land from urban and suburban development, mining, grazing, energy extraction, recreation, water diversions and timber harvesting, and suggest ways to mitigate such impacts. In addition to the editors, the contributors to this volume are Paul Adamus (Oregon State University, Corvallis), Michael A. Bozek (University of Wisconsin, Stevens Point), Robert C. Ehrhart (Oregon State University, Bend), James H. Gammonley (Colorado Division of Wildlife, Fort Collins), Paul L. Hansen (Bitterroot Restoration, Corvallis, Montana), E. Wetlands Samuel T. Prescott,2004 Wetlands with a variety of physical characteristics are found throughout the country They are known in different regions as swamps marshes fens potholes playa lakes or bogs Although these places can differ greatly they all have distinctive plant and animal assemblages because of the wetness of the soil Some wetland areas may be continuously inundated by water while other areas may not be flooded at all In coastal areas flooding may occur on a daily basis as tides rise and fall Functional values both ecological and economic at each wetland depend on its location size and relationship to adjacent land and water areas Many of these values have been recognized only recently Historically many federal programs encouraged wetlands to be drained or altered because they were seen as having little value as wetlands Wetlands issues revolve around disparate scientific and programmatic questions and conflicting views of the role of government where private property is involved Scientific questions include how to define wetlands the current rate and pattern of wetland declines and losses and the importance of these physical changes
