Measuring What Matters U. S. Department of Justice,Office of Justice Programs, National Institute of Justice,2013-11-20 In 1992 a paper by George Kelling appeared in The City Journal titled Measuring What Matters In this paper Kelling raised the perennial specter of police performance measurement but this time with a new twist His discussion focused on the organizational performance measurement demands of community oriented policing In essence Kelling s argument was that our traditional yardstick was outdated and needed to be changed The National Institute of Justice NIJ and the Office of Community Oriented Policing Services COPS also recognized that our historic measures of police organizational performance were outmoded To address this issue NIJ and COPS collaborated on a first of its kind Policing Research Institute that focused on measuring what matters The Policing Research Institute examined the implications of community policing for measuring organizational performance and helped move the industry toward a new more relevant set of assessment criteria To accomplish this task police executives researchers scholars and others interested in police performance measurement were invited to Washington D C to address a range of measurement issues Measuring What Matters consisted of three meetings each focusing on a particular set of topics Each meeting considered a set of discussion papers commissioned by NIJ and COPS and prepared by selected Institute participants The meetings produced Heightened awareness within the police and research communities of changing measurement needs associated with the shift to community policing Better informed Federal research and development grant programs on measuring police performance the NIJ Measuring What Matters research solicitation issued in May 1997 was shaped in part by these discussions A series of papers designed to reach a wide audience chronicling the Institute proceedings This compilation of revised papers

Doran,Melissa B. Burgess,2011-09-21 Since first emerging as an issue of concern in the late 1960s fear of crime has become one of the most researched topics in contemporary criminology and receives considerable attention in a range of other disciplines including social ecology social psychology and geography Researchers looking the subject have consistently uncovered alarming characteristics primarily relating to the behavioural responses that people adopt in relation to their fear of crime This book reports on research conducted over the past eight years in which efforts have been made to pioneer the combination of techniques from behavioural geography with

Geographic Information Systems GIS in order to map the fear of crime. The first part of the book outlines the history of research into fear of crime with an emphasis on the many approaches that have been used to investigate the problem and the need for a spatially explicit approach. The second part provides a technical break down of the GIS based techniques used to map fear of crime and summarises key findings from two separate study sites. The authors describe collective avoidance behaviour in relation to disorder decline models such as the Broken Windows Thesis the potential to integrate fear mapping with police community partnerships and emerging avenues for further research. Issues discussed include fear of crime in relation to housing prices and disorder the use of fear mapping as a means with which to monitor the impact of Closed Circuit Television CCTV and fear mapping in transit environments

Handcuffed Malcolm K. Sparrow, 2016-04-26 Whatever happened to community and problem oriented policing. How the current crisis in policing can be traced to failures of reform. The police shooting of an unarmed young black man in the St Louis suburb of Ferguson Missouri in August 2014 sparked riots and the beginning of a national conversation on race and policing. Much of the ensuing discussion has focused on the persistence of racial disparities and the extraordinarily high rate at which American police kill civilians an average of roughly three per day. Malcolm Sparrow who teaches at Harvard's Kennedy School and is a former British police detective argues that other factors in the development of police theory and practice over the last twenty five years have also played a major role in contributing to these tragedies and to a great many other cases involving excessive police force and community alienation. Sparrow shows how the core ideas of community and problem solving policing have failed to thrive. In many police departments these foundational ideas have been reduced to mere rhetoric. The result is heavy reliance on narrow quantitative metrics where police define how well they are doing by tallying up traffic tickets issued Ferguson or arrests made for petty crimes in New York. Sparrow's analysis shows what it will take for police departments to escape their narrow focus and perverse metrics and turn back to making public safety and public cooperation their primary goals. Police according to Sparrow are in the risk control business and need to grasp the fundamental nature of that challenge and develop a much more sophisticated understanding of its implications for mission methods measurement partnerships and analysis

Police Leadership and Administration Gennaro F. Vito, Anthony G. Vito, William F. Walsh, 2024-09-19 This innovative text adapts the strategic management process to the police organizational environment illustrating how to tailor responses to the unique problems and issues that professionals are likely to face in the field of law enforcement. The authors cover pioneering management techniques for leaders facing the challenges of today's complex environment offering police executives guidance on planning setting direction developing strategy assessing internal and external environments creating learning organizations and managing and evaluating the change process. The book also tackles how to handle the political economic social and technical considerations that differ from one community to the next. Providing a foundation with which to adapt to an ever changing criminal justice climate this book trains leaders to search for solutions rather than relying on old formulas.
