Managing Decline Ted Morris,2026-01-28 Thirty one men held the position of Foreign Secretary during the twentieth century usually though not invariably being one of the two or three most significant figures in Cabinet This book provides profiles for each of them both as standalone essays and as part of the wider story of how the holders of the office have developed from being landed grandees to run of the mill politicians from largely independent practitioners of foreign policy to playing a supporting role behind their Prime Ministers and how they oversaw Britain s decline from the preeminent global superpower to a second tier state with sharply circumscribed freedom of action The book will examine the journey from Henry Charles Keith Petty Fitzmaurice 5th Marquess of Lansdowne scion of an ancient family through to Robin Cook grandson of a miner The subjects include some of the best known politicians of the twentieth century Grey Bevin Callaghan but also a number who have fallen into comparative obscurity Rufus Isaacs Selwyn Lloyd Franciss Pym When even Austen Chamberlain the only serving British Foreign Secretary to win a Nobel Peace Prize for his triumph exactly a century ago at Locarno has been written off as residing in virtual oblivion there is a strong case that none of them is above re examination The end of the Victorian era provides the backdrop with Britain emerging from the twilight of splendid isolation into ambiguous entanglements by 1914 into the inter war uncertainties of the League of Nations and collective security then firmly embedded in the post war alliances of NATO and the EU while struggling to cope with the issues arising from the disentanglement from Empire
