system remained closed until the fall of 1964 when the County was forced by federal courts to comply with the school integration ordered by Brown. The vast majority of white children had continued their education in a private whites only academy. But more than 2 000 black students were left without a formal education by the five year closure. Their lives were forever changed. A Civil Rights Reparations Story: The Road to Healing in Prince Edward County, Virginia by Ken Woodley is his first person account of the steps taken in recent years to redress the wound. The book's centerpiece is the 18 month fight to create what legendary civil rights activist Julian Bond told the author would become the first Civil Rights era reparation in United States history. It was led by Woodley then editor of The Farmville Herald still owned by the original family. If the 2003-04 struggle to win passage of a state funded scholarship program for the casualties of massive resistance had been a roller coaster it wouldn't have passed the safety inspection for reasons of too many unsafe political twists and turns. But it did. The narrative unfolds in Virginia but it is a deeply American story. Prince Edward County's ongoing journey of racial reconciliation blazes a hopeful and redemptive trail through difficult human terrain but the signs are clear enough for a divided nation to follow. The history is as important for its insights about the past as it is about what it has to share about a way into our future.

Freakonomics Twentieth Anniversary Edition Steven D. Levitt, Stephen J. Dubner, 2025-11-11. Here's a first year book that encourages critical thinking and sparks discussion. Freakonomics addresses current social questions that students will enjoy arguing about both in the classroom and over coffee in the student union. Which is more dangerous: a gun or a swimming? Why do drug dealers still live with their mothers? What makes a perfect parent? These may not sound like typical questions an economist asks but Levitt is not your typical economist. He studies the mysteries of everyday life from cheating and crime to sports and child rearing and his conclusions regularly turn conventional wisdom on its head, helping students develop a critical eye to many things that are presented as fact.
