

Spontaneous charge of a Submarine Cable

Mr. Lumsden of the Electric Telegraph Company says that a submarine cable new from the factory placed and which he never has looked at, no current passed through it, when placed in a tank becomes after a brief charge, but always provisionally. The discharge when one end is placed to the earth is not instantaneous but continues for several minutes. When completely discharged and allowed to rest for some time it becomes again charged and so on indefinitely. He says that a Volta is sufficient to show this.
