Abstract: In this paper, there are three articles that concentrate on the analysis of genres should be reviewed. Particularly so, these three articles shed light on the contribution of the corpus linguistics methodology to the analysis and application of academic genres. For easy reference, I have to label Article 1 on From Text To Corpus: A Genre-based Approach to Academic Literacy Instruction by C. Tribble and U. Wriggote, Article 2 on Using Corpus-based research and Online Academic Corpora to Inform Writing of the Discussion Section of a Thesis, by L. Flowerdew and Article 3 on An Integration of Corpus-Based and Genre-Based Approaches to Text Analysis in EAP/ESP: Countering Criticisms Against Corpus-Based Methodologies, also by L. Flowerdew.

Keywords: Linguistics methodology, Genre-Based Approaches to Text Analysis in EAP/ESP.

1. INTRODUCTION

To properly introduce the discussion, the notion of genre has emerged as a subject of interest in various disciplines such as arts, media, linguistics and applied linguistics. A novel for instance, is one of the many examples that have been regarded as belonging to a genre and boasting off its own typical schematic structures. Important implications have grown out of this trend. An implication suggests that the nature of language should be seen as a functional tool for fulfilling particular communicative purposes. Also cannot dismiss the fact that genre-based language teaching has survived as an effective form of language pedagogy in schools (Derewianka 1990), at colleges and universities (Swales, 1990), and in various professional contexts (Bhatia 1993). The underpinning theory is that explicit teaching of schematic structures that characterise particular genres is critical to learners' success in appropriating these genres. Being a concept with extensive applications, genre has been conceptualised in a diverse manner according to several different theoretical camps. As we shall see later, there are two major approaches to genre, the first is a text-based and the second is a situation-oriented approach (Flowerdew, 2002). The major divergence can be seen in the theoretical and pedagogic focus of these studies. A text-based approach describes and teaches generic features of genres while a situation-oriented approach views genre as a response to recurring rhetorical situations with its pedagogic focus on inculcating students' contextual awareness. While both textual scaffolding and contextual awareness have places in genre pedagogy, discussion has seldom been noticed on what students learn from texts and what has led to the development of a writer's capacity to use genre forms in creative light.

2. ARTICLE ONE REVIEW AND FINDINGS

Article 1 makes a general claim that the broadening participation in Higher Education and a drastic increase in bringing in batches of overseas students has urged academic bodies to adapt on the literacy demands they require from their students, and to cater for the students' learning needs. With the different literacy requirements among the students, it has encouraged higher education bodies to strategise on some approaches to teaching academic writing.

In terms of the procedure, Article 1 researchers had resorted to the KLC Academic Writing Corpus to provide the databank of exemplars- the corpus contains the following data: laboratory reports of MSc Pharmacy students and course assignments and dissertations of MA ELT and Applied Linguistics students. Before building on the corpus, researchers

Case Marking and Reanalysis Cynthia L. Allen, 1999 It is commonly stated that the loss of case marking distinctions between Old and Middle English had profound consequences for the syntax of the language In particular linguists have attributed both the loss of the impersonal constructions such as methinks and the introduction of new passives such as he was given a book directly to the loss of case marking distinctions However the existing analyses generally suffer from empirical inadequacies insufficient available information concerning the case marking systems as opposed to the forms makes it difficult to determine exactly when crucial marking distinctions disappeared Dr Allen makes a careful examination of the primary evidence for how the loss of case distinctions proceeded and of the temporal relationship between changes in morphology and particular syntactic changes She demonstrates that morphological change had a less direct role in the triggering of syntactic change than is usually assumed and that some changes traditionally considered to be the result of syntactic reanalysis are better treated in other ways Some changes to grammatical relations were not the result of syntactic reanalysis but were caused by changes in verbal semantics while others which have been treated as syntactic reanalysis in fact involved no change to grammatical relations but only to the possible case marking associated with subjects Endorsement Fruitful interaction between historical linguistics and linguistic theory is rarely the aim and even more rarely achieved Allen's work is a remarkable exception It is her avowed intention to bring together the methodology assumptions and principles of the two disciplines to show that each can benefit from the other This she does with signal success Allen presents a careful and detailed examination of changes in case marking and claimed relationships to syntactic changes This in itself is valuable and significant More than this Allen provides a thoroughly worked out clearly presented model of historical linguistic investigation a rewarding blend of descriptive rigour and theoretical insight Australian Journal of Linguistics 24 02 1998
