Ludlaw Gap:

Ludlaw Gap Arthur G. Nelson, 2004-03-08 Isaac Barton a disillusioned recently discharged Vietnam veteran and Rachel an angry headstrong marching protester and flower child meet in San Francisco during the protests fall in love and marry When the war ends they move to Ludlaw Gap a community of ex hippies high the Sierra Mountains There with their precocious child April they live a life of self imposed seclusion and poverty When Rachel finds the body of her close friend Claudia buried in a shallow grave it stirs up a cloud of suspicion in the community She at first suspects her husband but soon realizes her mistake as the story gently pushes the participants toward its violent and totally believable conclusion Hounded by a lustful policeman and befriended by a kindly sheriff Rachel finds life generally miserable during the search The strength of this story is not the plot Rather it is the characters as they struggle to recover from our brief period of national insanity
