The Color of Tears Maya Gozaly, 2018-02-27 Do tears have a color A boy imagines that they do and so much more A boy asks his mother What is the color of tears He tries to guess their color and among other things matches each shade with a flavor Sweet tears salty tears sour tears He plays with imaginative descriptions If the tears were as red as ketchup he would spread them on sausage and swallow them in a second He imagines that brown tears are like mud on his face The mother plays along with the child and enjoys guessing along with him the color of the tears But whatever their color he learns not to lock them inside In the end she embraces him and tells him the most important message No matter what color the tears will be the main thing is not to leave them locked inside not to stop them but to let them out The mother's words move the child and he hugs her tightly The closeness between them leads the mother to shed a tear of happiness and the boy sees his mother's tear as golden in color which is to him the most special color Scroll up now to get your copy of The Color of Tears
