Work and Play with Numbers George Wentworth, David Eugene Smith, 1912      Work and Play With Numbers (Classic Reprint) George Wentworth, 2016-06-22 Excerpt from Work and Play With Numbers It has been recognized ever since the days of Pestalozzi that children when they first enter school have a taste for number work and also a considerable knowledge of numerical forms They use numbers in their games they talk about them they like to count and they enjoy a little work and play with numbers within their mental grasp On the other hand children of this age are not ready for such a study of arithmetic as the formal textbook offers A textbook of that kind would take away their love for number and would place upon them a burden heavier than they could carry Not to begin the study of the subject when the child enters school however is to say that the child's natural tastes should not be fostered What we need is to introduce in an informal and attractive fashion such number work as is within his grasp at this time Experience shows that children can easily learn the combinations in addition and part of those in multiplication before taking up a formal study of the subject in other words they can cover the work included in this little book Since the entire multiplication table is some times required it is given at the end of the book to be developed in the usual manner if necessary About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works      Course of Study for the Common Schools of Illinois Illinois Education Association.
