Population growth and economic development are the two major issues which have engaged the attention of our planners and policy makers ever since India attained independence however equally important issues such as physical and mental health of people nutrition education social inequality and poverty have not received the same attention It is evidently due to lack of understanding on the part of those who matter that healthy and well nourished people are the greatest national asset and a prerequisite for any sustainable development where as ignorance superstition and social tension are the greatest impediments in the process of development These facts have been emphasised time and again in most of the anthropological deliberations but with little effect on our planning processes and policies      Accelerated Fermentation of Fish Sauce,
