Evaluating the Mexico City Policy: Unintended Consequences in Ghana Shyamali Choudhury, 2012

The purpose of this paper is to shed light on the unintended consequences of the Mexico City Policy in Ghana The Mexico City Policy is a USAID policy that withholds funding from all foreign NGOs that provide abortion services promote abortion as a form of family planning or advocate for the legalization of abortion The policy's stated intent is to reduce abortion incidence but there is substantial qualitative evidence that the policy has other adverse consequences on women's health The literature currently contains only two quantitative studies which both evaluate the policy's effect upon abortion rates This study's focus on unintended effects will contribute to the literature by providing a more complete picture of the policy's effects on population program goals Using 1998 and 2007 Ghana DHS data I examine the effect of the Mexico City Policy on access to modern contraceptive methods prenatal care and delivery assistance Using two phases of the policy's historical shifts I hold constant personal wealth and environmental characteristics to isolate the effect of the policy and draw conclusions about its unintended effects and the resulting policy implications The findings of this study provide empirical evidence substantiating the policy's unintended adverse effects upon access to health services and suggest that these effects might confound both the policy's original intent and the effectiveness of all population aid in Ghana

DID THE MEXICO CITY POLICY AFFECT PREGNANCY OUTCOMES IN ETHIOPIA? THE IMPACT OF U.S. POLICY ON REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH AND FAMILY PLANNING PROGRAMS Katherine L. Tibone, 2013

Announced by President Ronald Reagan in 1984 as an executive order the Mexico City Policy MCP is driven by ideological beliefs that U S taxpayer dollars should not support overseas family planning activities which attempt to discuss promote refer or perform abortions The policy's main goal was to reduce the number of abortions worldwide by attaching conditionality to U S foreign assistance This conditionality reduced the amount of funding international non governmental organizations NGOs could receive if they did not agree to the policy Using a regression discontinuity design that takes advantage of the fact that the

MCP was reinstated by President Bush in 2001 and was repealed by President Obama in 2009 this paper analyzes whether the policy had an impact on the rate of abortions in Ethiopia The paper finds statistically significant evidence that indicates women are less likely to have an induced abortion when the MCP was in effect and subsequently more abortions when the MCP was repealed While this may seem sufficient proof that the MCP had the intended effect of reducing abortions in Ethiopia I also find there is high measurement error in the data causing significant bias that render these results inconclusive as to the true impact of the policy on women s health in Ethiopia Working Paper Marianne Mollmann,2004
