Other factors are fully as important as the cost of the feed in judging the financial success. Much more work is required to be following full-fed steers than when no shelled corn is fed. The city feeders, full-fed steers made a better finish, and hence higher prices on the market. There was not, however, as much difference in the actual selling price in these trials as many experimenters would predict. In fact, the "no corn" steers brought only 7 cents less per hundredweight than the others.

Because of the higher selling price and the greater gain made, full-fed steers made a much better average financial showing than did the no corn steers that in the village. While the full-fed steers made an average of $2.50 per head over cost of feed, the no corn steers were only $1.65 per head over cost of feed. However, in some of the experiments it seemed when corn was extremely high in price, the cost of gain was so much lower for the no corn steers than they seemed in other years.

In other similar experiments with yearling or 2-year-old steers it would have generally been decided to "feed corn" because it is possible to fatten steers satisfactorily without feeding anything else in addition to that in corn or corn silage.

1904. Feeding limited amounts of corn. — When it was proven that shelled corn will be more profitable to feed than corn silage, it was very much that in the village, or on the other hand, a small amount of corn, a middle course may be taken and a limited amount of corn may be supplied the cattle. That method has been used in a number of trials in which various amounts of corn grain have been fed.

The following table summarizes the results of 12 trials in which steers were fed at 100 lbs. Dynamide steers had been fed 100 lbs. corn in addition to corn silage, hay or mixed hay, and a small amount of commercial feed or limited corn. In each trial steers were kept 100 days in the city and 100 days in the village. The feeding period which averaged 100 days in length.
