English in Africa Josef J. Schmied, 1991 Introducing the subject of English in Africa this book examines the usage of English in education and in African literature The range of language forms and the attitudes towards English are discussed The author considers the influence of English on African languages The Language of West African Writing in English Peter Young, 1969 Part One of this study consists of a survey of the changing relationship of the West African writer to English as the medium of literary creation throughout the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries The African writer is followed through the almost complete cultural and linguistic dispossession of the eighteenth century which by its dose showed signs of slackening In Chapter Three the changing attitudes towards the African his education in English and the gradual re establishment of his literary independence in the new medium during the nineteenth century are discussed The process of the externalisation of the African the emergence of undeniable evidence of his cultural dignity and the final divergence from the British tradition which arose from the early nationalism are also considered as necessary background to the study of the later use of English in West African writing In Chapter Four the question of the choice of a language for literary expression in English speaking West Africa is examined with reference to linguistic thinking Part Two is a study of present day attempts to adapt the English language for literary purposes The various methods by which this adaption has been attempted are subjected to linguistic examination and their varying success is discussed in the light of the writers bilingualism which provides a useful insight into the literary effort in West Africa The study as a whole is an attempt to provide the foundation of objective preclinical criteria upon which a sounder criticism of the language of West African writing in English might be based

The English Language in West Africa John Walter Spencer, 1971 The Anglophone Literary-Linguistic Continuum Michael Andindilile, 2018-11-05 Michael Andindilile in The Anglophone LiteraryLinguistic Continuum English and Indigenous Languages in African Literary Discourse interrogates Obi Walis 1963 prophecy that continued use of former colonial languages in the production of African literature could only lead to sterility as African literatures can only be written in indigenous African languages In doing so Andindilile critically examines selected of novels of Achebe of Nigeria Ngugi of Kenya Gordimer of South Africa and Farah of Somalia and shows that when we pay close attention to what these authors represent about their African societies and the way they integrate African languages values beliefs and cultures we can discover what constitutes the Anglophone African literarylinguistic continuum This continuum can be defined as variations in the literary usage of English in African literary discourse with the language serving as the base to which writers add variations inspired by indigenous languages beliefs cultures and sometimes nation specific experiences East African Writing in English Angela Smith, 1989 A survey of East African writing in English covering novels poetry and drama
