CMA says customers not told price of treatment

A REVIEW of the veterinary industry has found that over 80% of vet practices website have no pricing information and few calls from customers were given prior information about treatments.

This was revealed by the ongoing Competition and Markets Authority (CMA) review of the veterinary industry. It has published several working papers setting out the evidence they have gathered and its emerging views on how the veterinary services market is working.

They have published the working paper on different aspects of the veterinary services market. How pet owners choose and purchase veterinary services, competition in the supply of veterinary medicines, business models, provision of veterinary advice and emergency clinics, the regulatory framework for veterinary professionals and veterinary services and an analysis of local economies.

The CMA started looking into the veterinary sector because they had concerns prices appeared to have risen faster than inflation and that consumers were not receiving sufficient information.

It was also felt that the regulatory framework was not fit for purpose and they wanted to investigate how the increasing control of a few large companies was detrimentally influencing consumer choices.

DIFFICULT CHOICES

They have found that consumers find difficult choices about the services they buy. The CMA says: "There appears to be limited information available to pet owners about prices, options available, quality of services and the extent of ownership of vet businesses."

Their initial research has found that 84% of vet practices' websites had no pricing information at all.

thinking and who we are representing by proxy the things that we don't quite want to recognize in ourselves. Often it's a specific breed or type of dog that serves as an informal cultural mascot embodying an era's needs, fears, desires, longings, aspirations, repressions, and hopeless contradictions. Combining cultural studies with personal narrative, this book creates a playful speculative reading of American culture through its canine self-representations. Looking at seven different breeds or types over the last seven decades, readers will go on an intellectual dog walk through some of the mazes of American cultural mythology.
