Management Solutions for Message Handling Systems (MHS) Taesang Choi,1995 Message Handling Systems
Michael Debenham,1990-09-01 Message Handling Systems and Application Layer Communication Protocols
Pietro Schicker,Einar Stefferud,1991 Protocols related to message handling systems and application layer communication protocols in general will continue to enjoy rapid development in the near future Demonstrations of data communication between different vendors application systems have become commonplace A tidal wave of OSI application products and services appears to be cresting now with the promise of a flood throughout the 1990 s The research papers in this book look at various aspects of this rush of development The role of security be it for authentication validation provision of privacy or for the preservation of integrity is a major focus of interest Other sections present recent work on implementations and experiences with the operation of MHS and Directory networks with extensions into new application areas Practical Guide to Message Handling Systems Robert Willmott,1993-01 Message Handling Systems provide a general purpose store and forward electronic message delivery service which can be used for a wide range of electronic communications such as electronic mail and electronic data interchange This guide gives an insight into some of the practical aspects of installing an MHS system in a user organisation Message Handling Systems Rolf Speth,1988 Networking Security and Standards Weidong Kou,1997-03-31 Security is the science and technology of secure communications and resource protection from security violation such as unauthorized access and modification Putting proper security in place gives us many advantages It lets us exchange confidential information and keep it confidential We can be sure that a piece of information received has not been changed Nobody can deny sending or receiving a piece of information We can control which piece of information can be accessed and by whom We can know when a piece of information was accessed and by whom Networks and databases are guarded against unauthorized access We have seen the rapid development of the Internet and also increasing security requirements in information networks databases systems and other information resources This comprehensive book responds to increasing security needs in the marketplace and covers networking security and standards There are three types of readers who are interested in security non technical readers general technical readers who do not implement security and technical readers who actually implement security This book serves all three by providing a comprehensive explanation of fundamental issues of networking security concept and principle of security standards and a description of some emerging security technologies The approach is to answer the following questions 1 What are common security problems and how can we address them 2 What are the algorithms standards and technologies that can solve common security problems 3 Message Handling Systems Robert C. Speth,Rolf Speth,1988 The aim of this conference was to present a state of the art picture in the area of message handling systems and to provide a forum for presenting and discussing future directions in research and development in this area In recent years message handling has developed rapidly for various reasons One is that the growth of national and international networks has stimulated experimentation with the introduction of new distributed applications of which message handling is a prominent and perhaps the most important one Another reason is that a basic standard for distributed messaging the CCITI X 400 series of recommendations provided a solid foundational framework not only for related development of products and services in the industrial domain but also for research into new concepts to integrate more powerful and sophisticated message related features into distributed interworking A third reason is that the remarkable progress in personal computing equipment in terms of capabilities and also with respect to cost reduction stimulated the use of computer based methods for human communications At this conference two main types of reports and discussions could be identified On the one hand there were the issues of interworking between X 400 systems their interconnection and interworking with existing non X 400 systems and related problems e g naming addressing directory issues and X 400 conformance testing On the other hand a larger set of reports addressed group communication with its various aspects of modelling concepts storage and retrieval facilities and office procedures Another feature of the workshop was that a number of parallel workshops were conducted to discuss state of the art and possible future activities their summary reports being found in this volume Information Technology.
