Metabolic Changes Induced By Alcohol:

Metabolic Changes Induced by Alcohol Gustav A. Martini, C. Bode, 2012-12-06 In nearly all parts of the world the consumption of alcohol is increasing and the morbidity and mortality of diseases induced by alcohol are rising correspondingly. It has been stated that alcohol is consumed because it produces intoxication. This effect is due to its toxicological influence on the central nervous system with the resulting functional disturbances. For many years the concept that alcoholic liver disease was of nutritional origin and only indirectly related to alcohol consumption and metabolism was accepted. Opinion has changed gradually in recent years and tends now to regard alcohol itself through its combustion as responsible for many metabolic disorders. Interest in this problem has increased during the past decade and numerous papers bearing on this subject have appeared. It seems that the oxidation of alcohol in the liver interferes in many ways with the intermediary metabolism of lipids, carbohydrates and proteins including enzymes and hormones and exerts damaging influence on the liver, the musculature, the heart, the brain and the kidneys. The Workshop Symposium brought together a limited number of the scientists involved in the new development: biochemists, physiologists, pharmacologists, pathologists and clinicians from eight European countries and from the United States and allowed a very lively and informal exchange. The symposium was honored by the presence of Sir Hans Krebs whose vast experience stimulated the discussion. It is a great pleasure to dedicate this volume to Sir Hans on the occasion of his 70th birthday on August 25th.

Research Advances in Alcohol and Drug Problems Yedy Israel, Frederick B. Glaser, Harold Kalant, Robert E. Popham, Wolfgang Schmidt, Reginald G. Smart, 2013-11-11 Over the last decade the world has experienced a growing interest in problems associated with the nonmedical use of drugs. This interest has corresponded to a real growth in the extent, diversity and social impact of the use of alcohol and drugs in many societies. As a result the amount of research and writing on the subject of drug problems has greatly increased and it has become very difficult for one individual to keep up with all the relevant literature. There is thus an acute need in the field for critical reviews that assess current developments and the present series is intended to fill this need. The series is not to be an annual review in the usual sense. The aim is not to cover all the work reported during the preceding year in relation to a fixed selection of topics. Rather it is to present each year evaluative papers on topics in which enough recent progress has been made to alter the general scope in a particular area. Owing to the multidisciplinary nature of problems of drug use and dependence the papers published in each volume will be drawn from several disciplines. However some volumes may be devoted to one particular problem with individual reviews and papers examining various aspects of it. The composition of the editorial board and the international advisory board reflects these objectives. The editors are members of the senior scientific staff of the Addiction Research Foundation of
