Moving Into Space:

Motion Control: Multi-faceted Movement In Space, Time And Neurological Impairment Yoram Baram,2023-05-08 This book addresses the mathematical and the practical aspects of motion implied by advanced control theory The richness and power of the theory are demonstrated by separate analyses of single model and multi modal repertoires consisting of verities of estimation and control facets Starting with purely mathematical concepts specifically abstract probability and information theories model control theory is gradually revealed as a rather amazing domain The mathematical equations taking essentially simple forms are exposed as powerful generators of motion Moreover seemingly obvious applications of the theory such as high performance aircraft control make room for unexpected virtual reality feedback in control of motion for the neurologically impaired Following the presentation of some historical milestones and mathematical preliminaries the book is divided into four parts The first deals with minimal order models of state estimation and control The second addresses multi modal estimation and control which facilitates the operation of high performance aircraft in large flight envelopes The third presents the transition from naturally nonlinear control of movement in obstacle avoidance and object targeting to virtually linear control of movement in the neurologically impaired The fourth and final part of the book addresses the application of virtual sensory feedback in walking with specific neurological impairment While the clinical studies reported were all based on a single model paradigm a later reflection reveals that given the variety of neurological symptoms associated with the relevant disorders a multi modal approach as that addressed in the control of high performance aircraft in a large flight envelope would be similarly applicable in the treatment of neurological disorders
