Excerpt from book TRAVELING WITH A REFORMER LAST spring I went out to Chicago to see the Fair and although I did not see it my trip was not wholly lost there were compensations In New York I was introduced to a major in the regular army who said he was going to the Fair and we agreed to go together I had to go to Boston first but that did not interfere he said he would go along and put in the time He was a handsome man and built like a gladiator But his ways were gentle and his speech was soft and persuasive He was companionable but exceedingly reposeful Yes and wholly destitute of the sense of humor He was full of interest in everything that went on around him but his serenity was indestructible nothing disturbed him nothing excited him But before the day was done I found that deep down in him somewhere he had a passion quiet as he was a passion for reforming petty public abuses He stood for citizenship it was his hobby His idea was that every citizen of the republic ought to consider himself an unofficial policeman and keep unsalaried watch and ward over the laws and their execution He thought that the only effective way of preserving and protecting public rights was for each citizen to do his share in preventing or punishing such infringements of them as came under his personal notice It was a good scheme but I thought it would keep a body in trouble all the time it seemed to me that one would be always trying to get offending little officials discharged and perhaps getting laughed at for all reward But he said no I had the wrong idea that there was no occasion to get anybody discharged that in fact you mustn't get anybody discharged that that would itself be a failure no one must reform the man reform him and make him useful where he was Must on
