Nonconscious Social Information Processing:

Nonconscious Social Information Processing Pawel Lewicki, Pawel Lewicki, 1986 Nonconscious Social Information Processing Pawel Lewicki, 2013-10-22 Nonconscious Social Information Processing presents a research program concerned with the processing of social information. It cannot be considered a typical social psychological research program however because it is not aimed at explaining any specific social psychological phenomena nor are the cognitive processes studied specific to the processing of social information. The program explores complex or high level processing of information that is not mediated by conscious awareness and social cognition seems to be an appropriate area in which to investigate this kind of processing. The research program began with observations which suggest that nonconscious acquisition and processing of information play a major role in human development and adjustment. The first two chapters discuss these observations and present preliminary theoretical assumptions. The subsequent chapters contain reports of 34 experiments on nonconscious information processing. The book is addressed not only to personality and social psychologists but also to cognitive psychologists concerned with information processing in general. The former may find this research relevant because most of the experiments describe some mechanisms of acquisition and utilization of social information problems they are working on themselves. The latter may want to ignore the specific stimulus material i.e. social information employed in most of the experiments and focus on the general nature of the cognitive mechanisms studied. Nonconscious Social Information Processing Maria Czyżewska, 1989 Conscious and Nonconscious Information Processing Philip Samuel Wong, 1992 Glittenberg v. His Fundamental Similarity Hypothesis relates such current issues in SLA theory as the nature of implicit/explicit learning, the role of noticing and focus on form versus meaning only processing to recent work in mainstream cognitive psychology suggesting a reinterpretation of the familiar acquisition/learning distinction. Stress Management and Counselling Stephen Palmer, Windy Dryden, 1996 This volume draws together leading experts in the fields of stress management and counselling. It covers both management and occupational aspects of stress counselling and also focuses on important issues of research and evaluation. Edell,Tony M. Dubitsky,1990-12-30 Written by leading industry practitioners and academic researchers this book explores the complex relationship between emotion and advertising The chapters include both theoretical and empirical papers representing a broad spectrum of approaches and techniques Some of the key topics include the measurement of mood emotion and feeling in an advertising context the effects of mood on recall and advertising effectiveness the interaction of the message with the emotional make up of the recipient and the structural aspects of an ad and how they relate to emotional responses Taken together these papers represent the cutting edge of research in the area of advertising and emotion and a major contribution to the literature of consumer psychology The volume is organized into six general sections Part I provides an overview of the ways in which emotions affect the advertising environment The next group of chapters investigates how emotional responses to advertising can and should be measured The third section is comprised of empirical chapters which examine such issues as the potential role of facial expression in the arousal of emotion differential emotional responses to storyboards animatics and finished commercials and the impact on emotional response of the introductory position of the brand name and product category within a commercial In Part IV the contributors look at how the emotional reactions to ads affect other constructs or behavior of interest to advertisers including message recall and attitude toward the ad The following section contains two chapters that explicitly examine how the emotional make up of the viewer interacts with the emotional fabric of the ad The final chapter presents an overview of the role of consumer psychology in the social sciences Ideal as a set of readings for graduate students and researchers in consumer psychology and advertising research this book would also be invaluable as a supplemental text for advanced undergraduate or graduate courses in cognitive psychology social psychology mass media communications journalism or family economics Academy of Management Learning & Education ,2007 Cognitive Therapies in Action Kevin T.
