

- Given a social welfare function, the social optimum will be determined by solving the problem:
 $\text{Max } W(U_A, U_B)$
 $\text{s.t. } U_A = G(U_B)$ where  $G(\cdot)$  is the Utility Possibilities Frontier.
  - The social optimum is reached at point C (Figure 5), where the highest possible level Social Indifference Curve (CIS2) is tangent to the utility possibilities frontier.
  - The process of voluntary redistribution, which moves A to B increasing social welfare, is not enough to reach the social optimum, C. Therefore, the action of the community is needed to coercively redistribute resources.
  - Optimal redistribution raises the conflict between efficiency and equity. In this context, the second Fundamental Theorem of Welfare Economics states:
 A competitive market price system is capable of producing any desired efficient allocation through neutral income redistributions.
- THEOREM ONE: when there is perfect competition the model is efficient
- Neutral redistribution is understood to be that which is limited to transferring purchasing power without opening divergences between the relative prices by which producers and consumers are guided, that is, without incurring efficiency costs. Income redistribution would not cause inefficiency.
  - This theorem is never fulfilled since the redistribution of income is never neutral. Since it affects the price line.

When we include a tax in the salary, it decreases as a whole, which causes the indifference curve to move inwards, this inward shift makes point B no longer achievable, so I will have to look for a new one. indifference curve so that it cuts with the new FPP, placing the equilibrium at point C.

The introduction of the tax, not being neutral, reduces the welfare of the poor.

We remember that the utility of the rich depends on his utility and that of the poor.

Dopfer,2019-08-20 First published in 1976 Economics has always been in a crisis since it broke away from social philosophy in the late eighteenth century But from time to time this crisis has been particularly acute Such was the case at the turn of the last century when the classical predictions proved less and less true and in response the marginalist schools emerged Such also was the case at the beginning of the 1930s when the proof of the established harmony propounded in that theory was contradicted by the Great Depression giving rise to the new macroeconomics pioneered by Keynes doubt that contemporary economics is in a crisis at least if crisis is defined as the inability to meet the challenge of the times Problems like mass poverty unbalanced affluence increasing regional economic disparities imbalances in population development irrational disposition of non renewable resources and production and consumption processes ill adjusted to the limited
