Benjamin Buchloh and Boris Groys provide the theoretical framework to comprehend a dialectic of art propelled by tension between the enduring history of art and the domineering presence of mass culture In dialogue with some of the most interesting modern and contemporary philosophical figures Bettina Funcke traces the divisions and alternations in twentieth century art between high and low engagements with popular forms She reveals fascinatingly how twentieth century artists not only seek to engage the people but also problematize the people as a political and cultural construct Michael Hardt co author of Empire and Multitude In this far ranging muscular book Bettina Funcke persuasively argues for a renewed attention to the dialectical relationship between high culture and mass culture Against the notion that the two domains have become wholly indistinguishable Funcke posits a stubborn even agonistic sphere still discernable between them in her account it is the praxis of contemporary art that both embodies and reflects upon this condition Skillfully delivering a complex history of the longstanding slippery debates around hierarchical and repressive structures of culture Funcke moves through two centuries of philosophical and art historical discourse Tending to canonical and often contradictory premises by authors including Buchloh Derrida Foucault and Greenberg and to still ambiguous and heavily debated artistic practices like those of Beuys and Warhol Funcke s analysis extends with great implication into the philosophical and artistic details of our own moment In Pop or Populus Funcke delivers a cohesive suggestive narrative that takes up the central issues of contemporary culture and refuses to consider any history a closed case Johanna Burton art historian and critic Associate Director and Senior Faculty Whitney Museum of American Art Independent Study Program New York Bettina Funcke studied philosophy art history and media theory at the Hochschule f r Gestaltung ZKM Karlsruhe Germany and has lectured at Bard College Columbia University Yale University and the ZKM Her writings have been published widely both in artist monographs and magazines including Afterall Artforum Bookforum Public and Texte zur Kunst A co founder of The Leopard Press and the Continuous Project group Funcke has worked as an editor at Dia Art Foundation and recently as Senior Editor U S Parkett Translated from the German by Warren Niesluchowski The New Criterion ,1986 America Celeste Adams, Franklin Kelly, Ronnie C.
