Michael S. Reidy, 2009-10-15 In the first half of the nineteenth century the British sought to master the physical properties of the oceans in the second half they lorded over large portions of the oceans outer rim The dominance of Her Majesty's navy was due in no small part to collaboration between the British Admiralty the maritime community and the scientific elite Together they transformed the vast emptiness of the ocean into an ordered and bounded grid In the process the modern scientist emerged Science itself expanded from a limited and local undertaking receiving parsimonious state support to worldwide and relatively well financed research involving a hierarchy of practitioners Analyzing the economic political social and scientific changes on which the British sailed to power Tides of History shows how the British Admiralty collaborated closely not only with scholars such as William Whewell but also with the maritime community sailors local tide table makers dockyard officials and harbormasters in order to systematize knowledge of the world's oceans coasts ports and estuaries As Michael S Reidy points out Britain's security and prosperity as a maritime nation depended on its ability to maneuver through the oceans and dominate coasts and channels The practice of science and the rise of the scientist became inextricably linked to the process of European expansion General tide tables U.S. Coast and Geodetic Survey, 1908

Tide Tables for the Years, 1900-19__. U.S. Coast and Geodetic Survey, 1899 The Historical Development of the Port of Faversham 1580-1780 Paul Wilkinson, 2006 This work is the first comprehensive historical and archaeological investigation into the maritime organization of the port of Faversham Kent SE England The period examined is 1580-1780 Faversham a multi functional town was well placed to take advantage of its maritime position in the Swale its closeness to Canterbury and the need to ship grain to London from this fertile crescent of North Kent An examination of the original and early development of the port is complemented by an analysis of the ships and port administration Unique methods of ship operation and manning are investigated and a comprehensive survey of the shipping fleets of Kent during their formative years undertaken This study is also concerned with analyzing the variety of mercantile responses to marketing opportunities Apart from providing London with ever increasing agricultural cargoes and return cargoes of manufactured goods Faversham developed a very healthy trade in wool oysters fishing and the manufacture of gunpowder This movement of commodities is investigated and the inter play between changes in production patterns assessed while the significance of the maritime development of the port provides ample scope for pioneering a study of port logistics and organization An examination of the origins and early developments of Faversham's maritime industry is long overdue and the uncovering of new evidence makes it possible to unravel the complexities of this mercantile activity during Faversham's formative years

During the past fifty years the Congresses and presidents of the United States have made many efforts to improve the performance of the federal government In this book a leading expert in public management examines the most important reform statutes passed and concludes that the problem is not too little reform but too much Paul Light explains that Congress and the presidency have never decided whether they trust government and its employees to do their jobs well and so they have moved back and forth over the decades between four reform philosophies scientific management war on waste watchful eye and liberation management These four philosophies argues Light operate with different goals implementation strategies and impacts Yet reform initiatives draw on one or another of them almost at random often canceling out the potential benefits of a particular statute by passing a contradictory statute soon afterward Light shows that as the public has become increasingly distrustful of government the reform agenda has favored the war on waste and watchful eye He analyzes the consequences of these changes for the overall performance of government and offers policy recommendations for future reform approaches Forest and Stream ,1895 Bulletin of the American Geographical Society of New York ,1898 Blue Book for the Colony of Natal Natal (South Africa),1886
