Military Expenditure Data in Africa Wuyi Omitoogun,2003 The international reporting of military expenditure data for African states is poor in many respects Figures that are published are often at variance with the socio economic realities of the countries This study examines the availability and reliability of official military expenditure data for six countries in West Central and East Africa using a combination of interviews with key actors in the military budgeting process and analysis of official documents in the countries selected The author concludes that data are indeed available in many of these countries but that the quality of the data varies from country to country Two main factors account for this the influence of the donors of economic aid whose insistence that artain certain maximum level of expenditure on defence should not be exceeded has encouraged the manipulation of data by the countries concerned and the general loss of capacity in several countries to compile the necessary statistics   Military Expenditures in Africa Nadir Abdel Latif Mohammed,1996   Military Expenditures and Socioeconomic Development in Africa Oumar Nabe,1983   The Economic Impact of Military Expenditures Daniel L. Landau,1993 Levels of military spending in developing countries have been falling and are relatively low in areas with economic problems Generally military spending typically about 4 percent of GDP is not associated with lower rates of economic growth of capital formation or of government spending on health education and infrastructure or with higher rates of inflation   Military Expenditure and Arms Trade Nancy Happe,John Wakeman-Linn,1994   Defense and Development in Sub-Saharan Africa: Codebook Patrick J.
