Non Democratic Regimes:

Non-democratic Regimes Paul Brooker, 2000 The core of the book adopts a thematic approach that answers such key questions as how and why military or party dictatorships emerge how a new dictatorship consolidates its position by seeking legitimacy and strengthening its control over state and society how a Hitler or a Stalin a Pinochet or a Saddam Hussein establishes a personal dictatorship how dictatorships make policy what their distinctive policies are how successfully they implement these policies and whether they are effective promoters of economic growth or economic reform Jacket When

Democracies Collapse Luca Tomini, 2017-10-24 While the process of democratization is nowadays an established scholarship the reverse process of de democratization has generated less attention even when the regression or even breakdown of democracy occurred on a regular basis over past decades This book investigates both the different combination of explanatory factors triggering the transition from democratic rule as well as the role of the actors involved in the process It aims to integrate different levels of analysis and explanatory factors through a comparative analysis of the phenomenon since the beginning of the third wave of democratization As such it addresses the existing divide between the approaches focused on the conditions and those focused on the processes of change using a mixed method research design This text will be of key interest to scholars and students of comparative politics democracy democratization and de democratization political theory and comparative political institutions Non-Democratic Regimes Paul Brooker, 2013-12-04 A

Non-Democratic Politics Xavier Márquez,2016-09-29 Since the 19th century there has been a slow transformation in the nature of the norms that regulate political competition and the uses of state power Monarchies whose legitimating principles appealed to divine sanction have steadily given way to republican regimes normatively grounded in appeals to the people Ideals of liberty equality and solidarity have gained ground relative to ideals of hierarchy and dependence Yet while in some ways the world is more democratic now than ever new forms of non democracy and new justifications for it have emerged Drawing on a wide variety of examples and data from around the world this important new text provides a global account of the history and theory of non democratic government over the past two centuries Grounded in the most recent social science research it shows how non democratic regimes have ruled through many different institutions from parties to armies to dynastic families and examines the economic and social performance of these different types of non democracy as well as the development of justifications for them It discusses how over the last century personal dictatorships and totalitarian regimes have given way to hybrid regimes combining electoral competition with various restrictions on the ability of parties and other social groups to effectively compete for control of the state The book assesses the processes through which non democratic regimes change and sometimes democratize from cultural change and economic development to collective action and revolution Offering a cutting edge analysis of the complex issue of non democratic politics this is the perfect introduction for students with an interest in how authoritarianism exerts itself in the modern age

Crisis and Breakdown of Non-Democratic Regimes Pietro Grilli di Cortona,Barbara Pisciotta,Eric R. Terzuolo,2016-06 The essays in this volume draw on an analysis of over 80 attempts at democratic regime change some successful others not in what Samuel Huntington termed the Third Wave of democratization Why do some authoritarian regimes collapse in the face of pressures to democratize while others survive And what does this tell us in turn about the factors thought to promote democracy The essays in this volume draw on a comprehensive analysis of over 80 attempts at democratic regime change some successful others not in what Samuel Huntington memorably termed the Third Wave of democratization beginning with Portugal's Carnation Revolution in 1974 The focus is on factors internal external and contextual that can promote democratic regime change and under what conditions they are effective or ineffective Legacies of the past civil society and elite dynamics are among the internal factors under examination along with economic development and crises and the role of stateness especially when it is weak On the external front chapters address both structural long term and conjunctural short term factors with particular attention to the varying impacts of interventions by international actors whether specifically intended to promote democracy or not Geography political economic human and cultural which helps delimit and condition the process of political change also receives attention While some scholars argue that we have now experienced a fourth or even a fifth wave of democratization the roughly 40 years following the Portuguese revolution featured an incomparably large and diverse set of efforts to democratize The lessons to be drawn from that huge body of data remain highly relevant as we seek to understand the outcomes of more recent color revolutions or the Arab Spring and as we consider the future of democratization

Non-Democratic Regimes Paul Brooker, 2009-01-15 Despite talk of the triumph of democracy much of the world is still ruled by political or military dictatorships Paul Brooker provides a comprehensive assessment of the nature of authoritarian regimes their changing character in the 21st Century world and the main theoretical explanations of their incidence character and performance

Demokratie und Frieden 10 entries in the bibliography language English abstract In the early 80s political scientists discovered that they overlooked something Earlier there was an agreement that democracies act as war prone in their foreign policy as non democracies The US was fighting in Vietnam Great Britain in the Falklands and France was fighting in India and Africa only to name three examples It was generally assumed that domestic politics had no influence on the foreign policy of a state Michael Doyle initiated a dramatic change in this point of view in 1983 1 He suggested that there was a huge and important difference between democracies and non democracies democracies do not or very seldom fight each other

Since this time uncountable numbers of essays were published which tried to find an answer for this correlation called the

DPP the Democratic Peace Proposition Most of them take a liberal approach and today the liberal approach for explaining the DPP is the leading one Although there are a lot of scientists working in this field there are still questions which cannot be answered with a liberal approach In the first part of my thesis I will introduce the main arguments and aspects of the liberal explanation of the DPP and show in a separate part where this approach failed Based on these findings I will introduce the neo realistic approach as an alternative explanation for the DPP particularly the explanation that is represented by Erol

Henderson As well as in the first section I will show at the end the problems and contradictions of this theory In the last part of my thesis I will bring these two approaches together and try to give an answer to question if today a neo realistic approach

Civil Society and Political Culture Nico Rausch,2008-09 Master s Thesis from the year 2008 in the subject Politics Political Systems General and Comparisons grade 1 3 Vilnius University 60 entries in the bibliography language English abstract This thesis studies the prospects for democratic transition in Cuba and Belarus The theoretical part argues that civil society is an important variable in transition theory and a necessary condition for democratic transition It furthermore argues that in relation with the political culture of one society and the respective type of regime present in one country it is decisive for a successful democratization Therefore the theoretical framework to study democratic transition should be widened from elites to masses and from a short term perspective to a long term one This is somewhat different from other studies that concentrate on structural factors like economic development economic crisis or international influence to explain democratic transition This thesis undertakes a qualitative comparative analysis of two nontransition cases Belarus and Cuba to avoid the selection bias of researching only successful cases of democratic transition and to solve the problem of not finding any individually necessary or jointly sufficient conditions for democratization The aforementioned factors are analyzed for each case comparing the main findings and drawing conclusions The analysis shows that the state of civil society in both countries can only be characterized as embryonic In the case of Belarus the relatively good starting position of the embryonic civil society after the dissolution of the USSR was not used to strengthen itself The civil society forces lost continuously support and strength and therefore the ability to fight for democratic transition The weakness of the Belarusian civil society was therefore a factor that led to a stabilizing of the authoritarian regime
