A Ride to Khiva and on Horseback Through Asia Minor (Classic Reprint) Fred Burnaby,2015-07-04 Excerpt from A Ride to Khiva and on Horseback Through Asia Minor

The account of the prohibitory order which I had seen published in the Pall Mall Gazette was I had every reason to believe correct and should I not find after crossing the Ural River and entering Asia that my long sleigh journey had been all to no purpose and have to retrace my steps through European Russia These were my first impressions on arriving in England hut on talking the matter over with some Russians of my acquaintance they assured me that I was entirely mistaken that on the contrary the authorities at St Petersburg would readily permit English officers to travel in Central Asia and it was observed that he order to which I had alluded referred only to merchants or people who tried to smuggle contraband goods into the recently annexed Khanates A few months later I had the honor of making the acquaintance of his Excellency Count Schouvaloff the Russian ambassador in London and formerly the head of the secret police at St Peters burg He was excessively kind and promised to do what he could to further my plans but in an answer to a straightforward question as to whether I should bp permitted to travel in Russian Asia or not his reply was My dear sir that is a subject about which I can not give you any answer but on arriving in St Petersburg the authorities there will be able to afford you every possible information It was a diplomatic answer one which bound the count to nothing and I went away charmed with the tact and affability or the Russian ambassador Apparently there was nothing to he learned officially from Russian sources but unofficially and one by one many little bits of information crept out I now first learned that General Milutin the Minister of War at St Petersburg was personally very much opposed to the idea of an English officer traveling in Central Asia particularly in that part which lies between the boundaries of British India and Russia According to him a Russian traveler a Mr Pachino had not been well treated by the authorities in India and this gentleman had not been permitted to enter Afghanistan and in consequence General Milutin did not see why he should allow an Englishman to do what was denied to a Russian subject Another peculiarity which I remarked in several Russians whose acquaintance I at that time had the honor of making it may here be not out of place to mention This was their desire to impress upon my mind the great advantage it would be for England to have a civilized neighbor like Russia on her Indian frontier and when I did not take the trouble to dissent from their views for it is a waste of breath to argue with Russians about this question how eager they were for me to impress their line of thought upon the circle of people with whom I was the more immediately connected Of course the arguments brought forward were based upon purely philanthropic motives upon Christianity and civilization They said that the two great powers ought to go together hand in glove that there ought to be railways all through Asia formed by Anglo Russian companies that Russia and England had every sympathy in common which should unite them that they both hated Germany and loved France that England and Russia could conquer the world and so on About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com
