

Lecture #25: Artificial Intelligence and Machine Learning

CS106E Spring 2018, Payette & Lu

In this lecture, we study Artificial Intelligence and Machine Learning. We start by defining and looking at the history of Artificial Intelligence. We explore the technological advances that allowed the recent renaissance in the field, and then some of the common types of AI systems out there in the wild. We contrast the value of these AI systems with some of the fears (some possibly illogical and some very real). We also examine some of the ethical debates surrounding this topic, debates that are and will consider to be at the forefront of the conversations surrounding AI in the near future.

We then go into a discussion on the technique behind most modern AI systems: Machine Learning. We cover some of the basic machine learning methods, state of the art machine learning models (neural networks) and some of the constraints of machine learning.

What is Artificial Intelligence

- There is not a widely accepted definition of artificial intelligence.
 - My favorite definition is that AI is the ability of a computer to do tasks that generally require human intelligence.
 - Another definition is a computer system that is able to do something that it was not explicitly programmed to do
- In general, most definitions are centered around the idea computers simulate human intelligence
- AI is generally considered to be behavior based rather than implementation based
 - In other words, it doesn't matter what's going on inside the computer, it just matters what the computer is saying/doing
- To understand why the definition of AI is so broad and fluid, we need to look at the history of AI

History of Artificial Intelligence

- The modern history of AI probably begins with Alan Turing in 1936.
 - Some argue that his turing machine, the predecessor to the modern computer, was the first instance of artificial intelligence
 - Turing also coined the term "Turing Test"
 - The test was simple - can this computer system fool a human into thinking it's a human (not a machine).
 - In his mind, this was the gold standard for "intelligent behavior."
 - The Turing Test is still a popular test today, although many question its validity as it only tests external behavior
- In 1955, John McCarthy and some colleagues coined the term "artificial intelligence"
 - They are credited with creating the field.
- Early AI systems were focused on "general intelligence"

Systems Munindar Paul Singh, 1994 Distributed computing is of great significance in current and future research and applications of computer science. As a consequence in artificial intelligence we can observe rapid growth in the subfield of distributed artificial intelligence (DAI). In particular, research on multiagent systems and their potential applications currently attracts a lot of interest. This monograph presents recent research and an introductory survey on multiagent systems and some other aspects of DAI. The author describes these systems as composed of intelligent entities, the agents, with intentions, beliefs, know-how, and communicating with each other. Furthermore, a semantics for multiagent systems in a general logical framework is developed. PUBLISHER'S WEBSITE
