

A hand-drawn organizational chart on a whiteboard. The chart features a hierarchy of boxes connected by arrows. At the top is a single box. Below it, three boxes are arranged horizontally, connected by right-pointing arrows. The middle box of this row has a downward arrow to a box below it. To the left of the top row, a box has an arrow pointing to the first box of the top row. Below the middle box of the second row, there are two more boxes side-by-side, with arrows pointing to them from the box above. At the bottom, a single box has arrows pointing to it from the two boxes above it. A feedback loop is shown on the left side, with an arrow pointing from the bottom-most box back up to the first box of the second row. The text 'Organizational Theory' is written in the center of the diagram.

Great Minds in Management Ken G. Smith, Michael A. Hitt, 2005-09-22 In Great Minds in Management Ken G. Smith and Michael A. Hitt have brought together some of the most influential and original thinkers in management Their contributions to this volume not only outline their landmark contributions to management theory but also reflect on the process of theory development presenting their own personal accounts of the gestation of these theories The result is not only an ambitious and original panorama of the key ideas in management theory presented by their originators but also a unique collection of reflections on the process of theory development an area which to date little has been written about by those who have actually had experience of building theory In their concluding chapter Ken G. Smith and Michael A. Hitt draw together some common themes about the development of management theory over the last half a century and suggest some of the conclusions to be drawn about how theory comes into being
