Bryer,Egle Butkeviciene,Rimantas Rauleckas,Egle Vaidelyte,Jolanta Vaiciuniene,Paulina Budryte,2023-11-13 Self determination in the European Union rests on the strength and skills of a country s representatives to manage and leverage relationships with other nations and for individuals it rests on the ability to use autonomy and freedom wisely To flourish an individual must consciously determine their own path Similarly we can say a country can flourish Self determinism for a country is conditioned on the forces that facilitate or hinder its ability to succeed as a society The same forces that can help a nation to flourish might also accelerate the decision to emigrate among a nation s people This is the paradox and it is the quest national and individual self determination to allow choice for emigration but to have strength of culture civics and institutions to discourage it or to encourage return migration for those who have left In this book we address this paradox and this quest using the case of Lithuania More specifically we examine how municipalities can and do respond to ongoing population shrinking due to emigration in Lithuania the non economic factors that facilitate decisions to emigrate and the opportunities for local governments to shrink smartly or reverse shrinkage Dearborn Independent ,1925 Pro Lithuania ,1915 The History of the Lithuanian Nation and
