Pastorino, Paula Marchelli, 2020-11-18 Global climate change requires the development of programs that consider the active restoration of degraded forests and the use of native trees in afforestation to preserve the natural environment International commitments like the UN REDD program the Montreal Process and the Convention on Biological Diversity call for the breeding of species rarely contemplated by large industrial companies Low intensity breeding is the most rational strategy for those species simple but robust and not dependent on continuously increasing funding and therefore effective even with a relatively small budget. It commonly focuses on high genetic diversity rather than improving economic traits and adaptability rather than productivity. Controlled crosses with full pedigrees typical of high intensity breeding are replaced by open pollination. This book presents state of the art breeding strategies from the last two decades for several forest tree species of prime importance in the natural forests of Argentina. They are distributed in the three main forestry ecoregions of the country: the subtropical dry forest Chaco, the subtropical rain forests Yungas and Alto Paran rainforests and the temperate forests of Patagonia. The book also discusses the genetic patterns of the selected species defined using genetic markers together with the analysis of the variation in quantitative traits. Further, it examines the crucial features of their reproductive biology such as the mating system and gene flow and describes the current breeding programs. Lastly, it presents the latest developments in genetic resources and their emerging applications concluding with some reflections and perspectives related to the conditioning imposed by climate change.

Northwest Trees STEPHEN F. ARNO, 2020-09 We Speak for the Trees Native Forests Action Council (N.Z.), 1987 Conserving Native Forests Justin Healey, 2020

Time is running out for the world's forests whose total land area is shrinking daily. Humans depend on forests for shelter, the food we eat, the air we breathe, and the wood products we use. Besides providing habitats for animals and livelihoods for people, forests also protect biodiversity, prevent soil erosion, and help to mitigate climate change. Global deforestation and forest degradation is a great problem requiring greater action. This book looks at the current state of the world's forests and progress towards more sustainable forest conservation globally. It also focuses on how Australia is managing and conserving its own native forests with topics including forestry protection policies, tree clearing and logging practices, the debate over native forest logging, including old growth forests, sustainable forestry practices, plantations and certification, and addressing habitat destruction and species loss. What are the sustainable solutions to deforestation and forest management? How do we see the forests for the trees?
