Col. Nathan (Nathan) argued at Washington about 1860 that the southern rebellion during the Revolution of 1861-65 was an attempt to break up the Union and that the Southern states were therefore law-breakers, and that their rebellion was an attempt to break up the Union. Nathan was present in 1863 at the battle of Shiloh in which the first major important battle of the rebellion was fought.

“We submitted this document over a weekend and made up of two sections of text. It is difficult to say exactly what the purpose of the document was, but it seems to be a history of the local community and a history of the local culture and proposed development. You can see many references within the document to the local town ‘Bromley’.
